Another internet seller gets "noticed".

Before the

Washington, D.C. 20554

In the Matter of)

Palco Electronics, Inc.) File No. EB-04-DT-062

Southgate, Michigan) Citation No. C20043236003)

CITATION

Released: February 20, 2004

By the Enforcement Bureau, Detroit Office:

This is an official Citation issued pursuant to Section 503(b)(5) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended ("Act"), to Palco Electronics, Inc. ("Palco") for violation of Section 302(b) of the Act, and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Commission's Rules ("Rules").

2..

On February 10, 2004, Palco offered for sale at their store located at 18676 Eureka Road, Southgate, Michigan, the following non-certified Citizens Band ("CB") transceivers:

NAME MODEL COST

Ranger Communications American Spirit (SS-3900 EGHPA) $199.99

Ranger RCI 2950 DX $269.99

Ranger RCI 2970 DX $399.99

Ranger RCI 6900F Turbo $454.99

Ranger RCI 2985 DX $439.99

Ranger RCI 2995 DX $589.99

According to the Commission's records, these devices have not received an FCC equipment authorization which is required for Citizens Band transmitters marketed in the United States.

3.

Section 302(b) of the Act provides "No person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section." Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that ". no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) In the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled.." Palco's offer for sale of these devices violates both sections.

Palco marketed these devices as amateur transceivers. The Commission has evaluated radiofrequency devices similar to those listed in paragraph 2 and concluded that the devices at issue are not only amateur radios but can easily be altered for use as CB devices as well. A CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service, and it must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation. The Commission has further concluded that these devices fall within the definition of a CB transmitter and therefore cannot legally be imported or marketed in the United States. See Response from the Commission's General Counsel to U.S. Customs Service dated May 17, 1999, 14 FCC Rcd 7797 (1999).

Additionally, dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certificated under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states "..([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services..will not be certificated." See also FCC 88-256, 1988 WL488084 (August 17, 198 . This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id., and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

Furthermore, the Commission has revised Section 2.1204(a)(5) of its Rules to prohibit all marketing and/or offering for sale in the United States of such devices even when the purchaser(s) had provided assurances that the transceivers are being bought solely for export. ALL DOMESTIC MARKETING OF SUCH DEVICES VIOLATES THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, AS AMENDED, AND THE COMMISSION'S RULES.

7.

In addition to the marketing of the non-certified transceivers addressed above, Palco is hereby warned that Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.815(c) of the Rules requires FCC Type Acceptance (or Certification) of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies below 144 MHz. Furthermore, Section 2.815(b) of the Rules prohibits the marketing of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies between 24 and 35 MHz.

Subsequent violations of the Communications Act and/or the Commission's Rules may subject the violator to substantial monetary forfeitures not to exceed $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation, seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal sanctions including imprisonment.

Palco may request a personal interview at the Commission's Field Office nearest your place of business. The nearest office is the Detroit Office, 24897 Hathaway Street, Farmington Hills, Michigan 48335-1552 , which you may contact by telephone at (24 471-5661. You must schedule this interview to take place within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation. Alternatively, you may submit a written statement to the above address within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation. Any written statement should specify what actions have been taken to correct the violations outlined above. Please reference case number EB-04-DT-062 when corresponding with the Detroit Office.

This Citation shall be sent First Class U.S. Mail and, Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested, to Palco Electronics, Inc., 18676 Eureka Road, Southgate, Michigan 48195.

11.

The Privacy Act of 1974 requires that we advise you that the Commission will use all relevant material information before it, including any information disclosed in your reply, to determine what, if any, enforcement action is required to ensure compliance. Any false statement made knowingly and willfully in reply to this Citation is punishable by fine or imprisonment under Title 18 of the U.S. Code. Ok, so to make this work, they will have to ban all radios with the capability to have full coverage transmit. My Ic-746 is easily converted. What's the difference? There is none. No Mars, no chance to expand radios to cover future bands, etc. So, the above being true, a good lawyer will punk the FCC.

NO! Even if this were true (and it's NOT), there still is the issue of USE.
And the law concerning licenses and unauthorized USE is valid, as that which precludes the use of "certain" radios as opposed to others.

Pacetronics? I'm told that they refused to accept the certified letter.
Takes a bit of time for that to go thru the pipeline. There's MUCH more in store yet--even if it requires stiffening up FCC's regulations even yet again (They just revised their rules recently regarding the uncertified radios recently).

People being interferred with are fed UP with this crap and are not going to stand for this sh anymore. If the BIG REDDIO guys would just stay where they are allocated, we wouldn't be arguing back and forth now.
But NOOOOOOOOOO! They think they have some special right to their frequencies and everybody else's too!

Ain't gonna happen, Cap'n.

I just bet you will be hearing MORE real soon about Pace, Palco, and others. I'd betcha money on it.

OK, so they ban 10/11 meter rigs. What premise prevents them from banning full coverage rigs? Same difference, both are easily modified. Why should a single band rig that happens to work on 11 meters be banned before a rig that will transmit from 1-30 megs with the same type of simple mod? We're not talking apples and oranges here, Jerry. They are both apples. Not to mention the obvious. Full coverage rigs have MUCH (caps for you, Jerry) more potential for abusing important bands. And as far as 10 meters goes, you and I both know it's a rather useless band. You aren't making sense, and really, you are beginning to sound a little Dougay. Did you and he play nice with each other this weekend?

No the one sold in the truckstop for $129 is an apple. The one that sells for $899 in a ham radio dealer is an orange

If they start getting sold at Big Daddys truck stop as CBs then their will be action taken but it'll never happen since truckers and freeloaders wont go below 11 meters because their shiny coily antenna wont work there LOL

The "BIG REDDIO guys" aren't allocated to the Citizen's Band, Jerry. In fact, those "BIG REDDIO guys" have more in common with hams than CBers -- many even operate with ham equipment.... and some are even hams! So if they belong anywhere it's the HAM BANDS! In other words, clean up your own mess and don't sweep it into the Citizen's Band!

>But NOOOOOOOOO! They think they have some >special right to their frequencies and everybody else's too!

But then there are some elitist hams who think it's perfectly fine for these ham-wannabes to operate illegally, just not on their turf. They talk big about laws, but from the other side of their mouths they say that the laws should be ignored by others for the sake of the ham bands, like they have "some special right" to dictate where people can and can't violate the laws.

Ham-o-crites.

Funny how times change. Remember when the telly was huge and like a micro-sized tv's, now the trend is back to as big as one can afford with

Yup,,and hammies (with the exception of nocodes) can own, modify, and USE these type radios...bwaaaahaaaaa,,what a catch 22,,,especially when one takes into consideration the truth of the matter by peeking into th FCC files,,,,,the overwhelming majority of problems you speak of originate with hammies.....they make up a ratio of approximately 200 to 1, maybe more, concerning FCC enforcement activity.

Really? You cleanly illustrated how ignorant N3CVJ, KC8LDO, N8WWM and WA3MOJ are by their redundantly and klownish claims that "FCC rules" is a synonym for "federal law",,,,,as the FCC can not revise law.....you really ought to educate these non-educated klowns, Jerry.

A bit odd how you find poor every-day hammie behavior, which is much more rampant and identifiable, less offensive than the occasional cber who may break a law.

No different than you thinking you have some type personal claim to public resources,,,,,that you feel a license gives you specific "ownership" (something you have claimed inthe past) to something that will never be "yours" does share with the reader your mindset that is responsible for your personal feelings and malice toward one of the smallest objectives that mar your service,,I've met many like you, Jerry..rather than clean your own backyard and filthy contributing neighbors, you need look to another to blame for MAKING you act the way you do.....talk about accepting responsibility,,,,my goodness,,,do you not know charity begins at home, OM!

Jerry, we have always heard about places that get popped. In fact, the FCC is actually BEHIND in their discipinary actions (compared to the number of last year and the year before). Nope,,,,,you ain't gonna hear much this year,,,did you forget it was an election year? The attention is going where it always has,,,dirtbag conglomerates like Clear Channel, not the cber you claim responsible for mucking up hammie radio,,,although that is a great line.

The likelihood of one individual being correct increases in a direct

Exactly. When the radios in contention are banned, Jerry and the like will then have to resort to blaming the die-hards that still have such radios as to the cause of their consternation, as he always claims if a radio op breaks the law, they should get what's coming,,,but given the astronomical number of hammies busted compared to cbers, JerryO has yet to post details concerning hammie enforcemen in same jovial approac he takes with cb-related enforcement....ah,,but that would require the power of objectiveness.

Jerry automatically discounts the theory a hammie would do such a thing, compared to a cber with a Galaxy, despite the FCC's own records affirming the problem is much worse with licensed hammies and that hammies with the equipment have been the ones busted and even jailed for such activity, at a rate that far exceeds any enforcement against cbers.

Especially when he begins his bullshit claims about the magnitude of cbers messing up the airwaves compared to hammies (read: mostly nocodes). Hell, half of them couldn't learn code, let alone pass it, and the rest failed the code test (like Lelnad last August)..no wonder there are so many pissed of nocodes. 75 phone really seems to be taking a nosedive lately,,,,,in fact, all the popular hammie bands seem to be in trouble. ..and here sits Jerry, picking his nose and blaming others when it bleeds.

For auction is a Realistic TRC-458 base CB. This is a very nice base station with lots of possibilities. It is physically a 7 out of 10. There are two switches on the back, which are broken and need to be replaced, but they are very cheap to replace. This radio was tested for tx/rx and works fine. Also included with the auction is a Turner Plus 3 base mic.

This auction is for a Comet CP-5 3/8 24 trunklip antenna mount. It comes with 16 1/2 feet of coax terminating in a PL-259 connector. It accepts antennas with a 3/8-24 base, such as a CB whip or a ham stick. Please visit http://www.natcommgroup.com/content.php?menu=42&page_id=92 for more details. The mount is in good shape. I don't need it anymore, so I'm getting rid of it.

Well, I don't know this Bruce but he sounds like an old "General Class" that I would probably not only like but would consider a knowledgeable ham.

The rest of you sound like no-coders (formally CBer's) who "Know" what is best these days for ham radio. Just listen to these questions on this node from all these Geniuses! They don't know where to put their "autotuners" in the line, They don't know where to "BUY" a windom (LMAO), they can't figure out how to tune the plate and grid on their rig, and it goes on and on.

Now there is nothing wrong with these questions but there is something very wrong with giving these folks HF privileges!!!!!! Now everyone has to go through this phase, but not with a general or advanced or extra class ticket!!!!! That is what the Novice band is for. For you to learn my friend.

I am an extra class boys and I definitely had to accomplish 20wpm code to get that ticket. As I recall, the exam I took was not something a 7 year old girl could have passed either :)

Now you boys need to come around folks like Bruce with you hat in your hand, not with that "screw you old man" attitude. Who do you think will answer your questions and Elmer you into being operators? You think the no-coders actually have the knowledge? ROTFLMAO!

Hi All

I've got an Astatic "Road Devil" noice cancelling microphone attached to my mobile CB rig which is a Uniden 76WXL.

I'm going to be swapping the 76 out of my car for a Uniden Pro520XL because the radio fits better in the limited space my car has. The 520 comes with a tiny 1000-ohm electret microphone.

Question is, can I use the "Road Devil" mic on the 520? The 520 does NOT have a microphone gain dial like the 76, so I can't correct it. Will the Road Devil distort the voice signal?

Advice welcomed!

If that were the case, one would need point out such a scenario would then be no different than blaming the posters of this board for interference on ten meter.
What I find entertaining is this hammie's self-purported claim of

Twist,

I've finally found the ultimate authority. Just wait until you go and operate running all of 25 watts on 10 meters and your wife comes into the shack hollering "you're getting into the entertainment center! I can't watch tv!" And some folks think the FCC can be dangerous. Bye bye house, bye bye car, bye bye bank account.

End of operation, end of discussion LOL Been there, done that ;)

Kinda makes all of the discussions around here moot too.

Donny;
You would be happier with the Wlison Mag mount. Your radiation pattern from the Wilson would be more omni (non-directional) than the mirror mount would be.

Anyone know what transistor in the Jackson Export does the Transmit/Receive Switching? I got the schematics but they are barely readable and this radio is receiving still when I transmit.
The green light stays lit when the transmit light is lit and mic is keyed causing it to oscilate off frequency

Thanks in advance

first you search for a repairman to fix this radio, then you ask for help connecting a freq meter to it, and now you decide to unload it on ebay? i say "buyer beware"

Jerry, I don't perceive anything you said as a threat. I don't freeband, and simply implied a likeness you and he have in common...that being the tendency to put things in caps as though you were yelling. Other than moderate presbyopia, my vision is fine, and I can read without you yelling at me.

I wonder how many time he's actually been struck? How many times he's had to file insurance claims for fire damage?

There IS equipment that will protect against a direct strike, he's right on that account. But you're going to pay more than it cost for his equipment to have it installed. There's a company here in south Texas that does that sort of thing. I live on a hill so I contacted them and asked them to give me a quote for tower protection. It was going to cost me $49k for them to protect and guarantee my tower and equipment against damage in the event a direct strike. This didn't include a $1200/year "maintenance fee." I did have them install grounding and protection on my house, the little spike things on the corners and peak of the roof. That was respectable, only $3000 but I got a nice break on my insurance costs that paid for it in about three years. My house has never taken a direct strike but my tower gets struck at least once a year. I should own stock in Belden!

It's just as well, Bristol tickets are golden. 140,000 people surround a 1/2 mile track. 43 cars running 5:10 or better gear, with 800 hp.

You can barely hear the sheet metal crushing over the open headers.

It's so fucking loud that you - NEED- ear protection!!

There's a waiting list longer than ten laps on that track, for tickets.

It's KILLER!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Punch Bristol Motor Speedway tickets into your favorite auction.

I was looking for someone to repair the switches on the back and give the radio an alignment, which is all mentioned in the auction.

I decided not to bother with it because to have the service done, I'd have to pay for shipping to and from Florida, packing (I'd want to be sure it was properly packed up in a good box with plenty of cushion), plus the actual service, which would cost me a lot more than it would cost for the tech to actually do any alignment that might be needed.

Someone with the proper test equipment and experience can run it through alignment procedures and replace two switches for a lot less than someone doing it for a living.

I say "Tim Nebo, read the whole thing before farting at the mouth."

I don't think a device (or "mechanical contrivance", for Twisty's sake) has ever been convicted of violating federal law. Not to say it can't happen (Azimov).

Part 15 devices are required to accept interference. At the same time, a ham is required to operate "in accordance with good engineering and good amateur practice", which I assume would include limiting the amount of annoyance caused to the neighbors via RFI. After all, a ham ticket isn't a license to broadcast interference, nor is it a 'get-out-of-jail-free' card if he does. The ham is not allowed to "willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference to any radio communication or signal", a rule which makes no distinction between signals to or from Part 15 devices, or from any other type of device under any part, including a broadcast transmitter. So if he is continuing to operate while knowingly (and therefore 'willingly') causing interference to the neighbor's TV, it is clearly the -ham- who is at fault, and those neighbors should be bitching to the television stations who would set that ham straight in a damn hurry.

They may also have the right to file a civil complaint against him for causing a private or public nuisance, which may be perfectly valid -regardless- of how legal he is under Title 47.

Not so, if the ham's signal is clean, no harmonics, no spurious energy, within the power limits, operating according to FCC rules, and the TV cannot reject out of band rf energy, it is the fault of the TV, not the ham and he is perfectly within his rights to keep operating. Same for any CB operator. If your logic made any sense, then if I complained to you that you driving your car by my house interfers with my afternoon nap, then it is your fault. I can't get my nap because you now knowingly (and therefore 'willingly') interfer with my nap (disturbing the peace), so I should be able to have you stopped from driving by my house.
Oh, you say I should better insulate my house against noise? Like maybe the TV owner should fix his crappy TV so it does not pick up unwanted signals?

And the tv station can't do a single thing but complain to the FCC.

Civil authority has no jurisdiction over an FCC licensed ham station.

I have answered that, even giving you the links. Not my fault you lack the ability to understand English. However, you have yet to show how non-registration makes it legal for anyone to copy, display, and even alter such items.

> The willingness of a victim to take action has nothing to do with whether a law > was violated or not.

At last, you agree... so whether or not a copyright owner decides to take required action for a civil action to be possible makes no difference - the law was broken.
I am beginning to think you are losing the plot... forgetting whether you should be arguing the "pro-legal" point, or that of the criminal mind.

> Doesn't the phone use some sort of unique > identification (like, for instance, a 'phone number')?

How do these give your name and address... the police cannot arrest a number.
Unless that ID is linked to a name and address, it is useless for anything but contacting the person.

>Is it immune to triangulation?

The key word here is "mobile". Sure, if someone is stupid enough to use it from home for that kind of thing. Even then, it would require time, money, and workforce - yet the police are not even given the funding to chase those who have already been identified.

If these tactics were available here and used for anything, it would be used for things such as missing people. Two 10 year old girls, carrying a mobile phone, go missing... yet the phone was not tracked down to find them.

>And if you dispose of the phone, does it somehow sterilize itself > of any trace evidence

Depends on if you put it on the fire (or in the furnace at your work place).
I wouldn't imagine that much could be obtained from the ashes left over from the fires used in the houses around here.

>(remembering that a phone is something you hold to your > head and speak into; i.e, it collects hair, dandruff and saliva)?

Only any use if the police already have the name and address, so they can collect samples from the suspect... no good for "tracking" someone down.
Plus, it also comes down to the commitment of the service provider to make sure that they are able to track down that phone... even if it has been changed to another provider (as they often are).
Heck, Frankie, they cannot even track down the 1000s of mobile phones that get stolen.

>And not forgetting how this world is turning into a giant television studio, does this > phone somehow render you invisible to surveillance cameras and microphones > whenever you use it? If it does all of that then I would consider it to be > 'untraceable'.

You do sound rather paranoid. Next time you go to take a p*ss in a lavatory, better check for a camera first.
The only cameras in this small town would be the few used privately for private areas. As long as someone doesn't break in to a property, just to use their phone, I would say that they needn't worry too much. I would imagine that many areas are the same, apart from large town and city centres.

> The fact is that some -do- get busted, which was my point.

So do many copyright criminals. When they get names of violators, they act on it - breaking down doors in "dawn raids" and collecting evidence.
They also walk round "car boot" sales and "flea markets", where copyright infringement is most common, busting people on the spot.
They are even smart enough to pin-point and grab the "look-outs" (often children), before they get to warn their boss that the "fuzz" are coming.

> >3) no child pornographer is ever going to file a claim of copyright > >infringement, and therefore the issue of child porn has absolutely nothing to do > >with copyright infringement;

If you think that violating laws is OK when the victims are unlikely or unable to take action is fine, then you must love child pornographers and their customers - their victims are often unwilling (or even unable) to speak out or take any action.

> Again, willingness to enforce the law does not nullify its violation.

EXACTLY.
You are now arguing MY point... just because the copyright holder may not be willing to take action (which he could if he registers the material or if it is not of US origin), it doesn't mean that a law has not been violated.

> Yet they still operate. If the violators were impossible to trace (your own

> conviction rate is zero, why do they keep trying, Peter?

Your problem is your lack of understanding when it comes to the nature of some people. You can only understand the "urges" you feel to vent your anger at anyone you can.
So, it is not surprising that you do not understand the desire of some people to keep trying against the odds when they know that what they are doing is good for other people. By keeping going, they are getting some "busts", and making a big issue of the under-funding.
The fact that it is public knowledge that they lack funds is proof that they are getting the issue known.

With enough pressure, the government may give them the funding - specially if they feel it is a vote winner. Just like the lack of CB enforcement and some people putting pressure on by reporting those taking Amateur band space illegally. I hear that some CBers have noticed that, due to that pressure, enforcement has been on the increase - and aimed at the big targets.

You mean section 412, the one that refers to what can or cannot be done in the case of an infringement?
You still seem to be relying on the "they can do nothing about it" theory. If the works are unregistered, it is because the copyright owner decided not to take that action. Now, remember your words?

> The willingness of a victim to take action has nothing to do with > whether a law was violated or not.

So, now show us the part where it says that anyone can legally copy, display, or "mutilate" copyright material, as long as the material is unregistered.
Never mind the childish insults, someone of your "advanced" years really should know better. It seems to display a loss of control of a situation and your emotions.

Maybe Tim can give you something to calm you down, put you at peace with the world. Just watch where you stub the thing out - I hear that you can be in trouble if you are not careful about disposal of cigarette ends. With all those cameras watching, you are sure to get caught.

Sure, Frankie, just because I refuse to see how a "pro-legal" person can defend copyright infringement, that makes me a "hypocrite", huh.
Like the emperor's new clothes... if we cannot see your imaginary "cop out",
we must be stupid hypocrites.

Un-dirty-word-believable. This exchange has continued for this long, yet you ----------<<<<<<<<[[[[STILL]]]]>>>>>>>>---------------

haven't read the code. Well, recess is over, Peter......

Start with Sec. 501, entitled "Infringement of Copyright", which defines a copyright infringer as "Anyone who violates any of the exclusive rights of the copyright owner AS PROVIDED by sections 106 through 121 or of the author as provided in section 106A(a)...."[emphasis added]. Okay, we now have a law that clearly states what comprises an infringement! Holy shit, that was just too damn difficult, wasn't it, Peter? Whew...!!!

Next we look at the PROVISIONS -- sections 106 through 121. What do THEY say? Let's see, first come the 'rights' of a copyright.....

Sec. 106. Exclusive rights in copyrighted works
Sec. 106A. Rights of certain authors to attribution and integrity

.....which nobody is disputing. The owner of a copyright has the exclusive right to copy the work, and the author may have exclusive right to claim authorship. Real simple, huh? Okay. Now, did you notice the first line of Sec. 106? It says, "Subject to sections 107 through 121", which means a copyright has LIMITATIONS, as can plainly be seen in most of the following titles:

Sec. 107. Limitations on exclusive rights: Fair use
Sec. 108. Limitations on exclusive rights: Reproduction by libraries and archives

Sec. 109. Limitations on exclusive rights: Effect of transfer of particular copy or phonorecord
Sec. 110. Limitations on exclusive rights: Exemption of certain performances and displays
Sec. 111. Limitations on exclusive rights: Secondary transmissions
Sec. 112. Limitations on exclusive rights: Ephemeral recordings
Sec. 113. Scope of exclusive rights in pictorial, graphic, and sculptural works
Sec. 114. Scope of exclusive rights in sound recordings
Sec. 115. Scope of exclusive rights in nondramatic musical works: Compulsory license for making and distributing phonorecords
Sec. 116. Negotiated licenses for public performances by means of coin-operated phonorecord players
Sec. 117. Limitations on exclusive rights: Computer programs
Sec. 118. Scope of exclusive rights: Use of certain works in connection with noncommercial broadcasting
Sec. 119. Limitations on exclusive rights: Secondary transmissions of superstations and network stations for private home viewing
Sec. 120. Scope of exclusive rights in architectural works
Sec. 121. Limitations on exclusive rights: reproduction for blind or other people with disabilities

Let's just start at the beginning, shall we? Sec. 107 -- "Fair Use". Just what does that mean? As Mr. Owl says, "Let's find out!"

========
"In determining whether the use made of a work in any particular case is a fair use the factors to be considered shall include - the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes;

(1)

(2)

the nature of the copyrighted work;

(3)

the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work."

(4)

Now let's apply each factor to the web page in question.

(1) What was the purpose and character of the use of the copy? Was it used for commercial purposes? No. Was it for nonprofit educational purposes? I suppose a technical argument could be made there, but I personally wouldn't consider it educational. So that section doesn't help.

(2) What was the nature of the work from which the picture was copied? Well, it wasn't exactly a work of art, and it certainly wasn't anything someone would pay to view in and of itself.

(3) How much of the original work was copied? One picture from the original page. Byte-wise it is only 20% of the work. Size-wise it is much less. And since the pic has very little to do with the topic of the page, it certainly can't be considered to be an indispensible component of the work. On the contrary, it's a fairly poor quality image for the intended purpose of the page.

(4) What impact did the use of the copy have on the owners of the original page? Is it affecting their business? No, and it's not like this was a bootleg CD sold by the thousands, or a forgery of a famous painting being sold as the original. The original page isn't even selling the page -- it's free to view by anyone! Has the author's reputation suffered by the use of that copied photo? Do you even know who the author (or authors) is? And who, beside you, actually cares that it was copied? Apparently not even the owner of the copyright cares!

So do -you- think that the copy in question falls under the "fair use" clause? I think most people are reasonable enough to see that there was no infringement here. But you probably don't see it the same way, and that's fine, because we have many, many more sections filled with copyright limitations to consider, not to mention the limitations under criminal infringement as outlined in Sec. 506. We should take a look at that real quick:

(a) Criminal Infringement. -

Any person who infringes a copyright willfully either -

(1)

for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain, or by the reproduction or distribution, including by electronic means, during any 180-day period, of 1 or more copies or phonorecords of 1 or more copyrighted works, which have a total retail value of more than $1,000, shall be punished as provided under section 2319 of title 18, United States Code. For purposes of this subsection, evidence of reproduction or distribution of a copyrighted work, by itself, shall not be sufficient to establish willful infringement.

WOW! Look at that -- another law that defines infringement, and with provisions for punishment, too! By golly we are really getting somewhere now, aren't we, Peter? But wait! It says, "...evidence of reproduction or distribution of a copyrighted work, by itself, shall not be sufficient to establish willful infringement." Well, Peter, what else did he do that might constitute criminal infringement? Anything? Did his actions result in "commercial advantage" or "private financial gain"? Did the copy he made of the photo have a retail value of more than $1,000? Anything at all? Can't you think of ANYTHING ELSE he did that might make his actions illegal under criminal code? No?

Well, we are running out of law. He's not guilty of infringement under civil or criminal law. How about case law? Oh, that's right, I already mentioned the movie.... you know, the one with the title that is the same as the case: "The People vs. Larry Flynt". You know what the US Supreme Court determined there, Peter? That parodies are protected as free speech under the 1st Amendment. Now if you are going to claim that the web page in question is not a parody then you had better up your dosage on the Thorazine because you don't have a very good grip on reality.

>Sure, Frankie, just because I refuse to see how a "pro-legal" person can >defend copyright infringement, that makes me a "hypocrite", huh.
>Like the emperor's new clothes... if we cannot see your imaginary "cop out",
>we must be stupid hypocrites.

You have it all wrong, Peter: You are a stupid hypocrite not because you refuse to see how a pro-legal person can defend copyright infringement, but because you refuse to see that I am -not- defending copyright infringement at all. THERE WAS NO INFRINGEMENT as defined by CIVIL LAW, by CRIMINAL LAW, by CASE LAW, by PUBLIC CONSENSUS (since nobody else is whining), and also apparently by the AUTHOR (who also is not whining). There was only YOU desperately looking for another reason to attack people in the newsgroup that you don't like!

Get some therapy. I hear that Twisty regularly visits a very good shrink, but it might take a while to get used to his invisibility......

You need make yourself more clear and use terms that are in the English dictionary and recognized as legitimate speech. Making up words and

You need make yourself more clear and use terms that are in the English dictionary and recognized as legitimate speech. Making up words and expecting others to acknowledge your baby-speak is what toddlers do when faced with a situation in which they have not the intellect to express themselves accordingly.

One who reads the article finds that the problem lies with cheap Part 15 consumer electronics, and NOT with the ham, who appears in the article, to be operating completely within his legal parameters. These devices have a sticker that state that said electronics must accept interference from other sources---such as a legal Amateur OR CB radio. As long as the ham or CBer is operating his station legally, there isn't much the consumer can do. It is, however, just good sense and public relations to do all one can to help the neighbor. I've done it. People complain because they have never read that sticker and are quick to yell simply because they don't know any better. And, of course, it is human nature to point at the other fella. After all, it can't be ME that is wrong.

(The RainReport is testament to the ARRL and individual hams' BEGGING

Perhaps the inception of the rain report was the result of pleading and begging, but the fact that it exists at all is testament that hammies can not police themselves effectively, otherwise no rainreport would exist. The rain report is merely illustrated in contrast to your continual and redundant posts concerning cber's getting popped that have nothing to do with any on this board,,such as intrusion upon ten meter..in fact, the record reflects that there have been many more nocodes and hammies popped for "intruding" 10 meter where they do not belong. Of interesting note is that you, JerryO, feel the mere mention of the rain report is somehow a "haha", some self-introspect and a look at your posts concerning cbers getting popped may shed some light on these feelings you aer experiencing, as the rain report, again, is mentioned only as a counterance to your initial claims and posts concerning cbers getting popped. Make no mistake, there is no problem you bringing such information forward, as it promotes discussion, but to cry foul when the same is illustrated of hammies, illustrates a view you are unable to see, or worse,,,unwilling.

My attempts? You are the scoundrel who has constantly tried in continual failure to draw some sort of connection between this group and truckers intruding on ten meters and actions by the feds against radio ops, when in fact, it has been shown, the FCC record reflects that N8WWM, nocode unremarkable, was popped by the FCC for conduct unbecoming a hammie (breaking federal law, according to the Gillinad, Hall, Lelnad, and Geogre). You're being extremely dishonest, Jerry.

Who said anything otherwise, Jerry? Again, you are attempting to convey an intentionally dishonest message with your comment "not the other way around". You appear to need a vacation, Jerry.

>Warnings to hams continues to decline as the

Is that what you believe? That the warnings are declining because behavior is changing out of fear of the FCC? HAHHAHAHHAHHAHAHHAHHAHHAHHAHAHHAHHAHHAHHA! You really need to listen to pirate radio some time to find out just how fearful this factor you speak of is recognized. No doubt, you will have an entire new cause to go after, after all, these broadcasts make your truckdriving ten meter bandits citizen-of-the-year.

You're preaching to the choir, Jerry,,and of course, Jerry Oxendine could not possibly be wrong. Never mind I posted nothing but a link to the story,,,never mind I made no comments concerning the interference one way or another, but you go ahead and claim that it's a "haha" by the mere posting of the link,,,,,and you go on posting your links and posts concerning cbers getting popped which are somehow "different", and not to be construed in the same manner the hammie busts are presented.

I do? The reserve was actually set for $50, not $100. I decided to keep it since I probably wouldn't get the same amount back for it, plus the packing cost would cut too much into any money I got for it. It's just plain not worth selling right now. I'll fix the switches when I can find the time, test it out and see how good it is.

My question is can my setup handle a XT-400, or I'm way over my head for a beginner, I have a Chevy Silverday Z71 running a stock alternator 105amp, my radio is a emperor ts-5010 the radio peaks at 60watts using a midland metter, my SWR is 1:3, I'm using a Wilson SW-2000 antenna,I dont know my dead key but I"ll find out.

I like the look of the XForce XT-400 more then Magna Force 900, I pretend to use SSB and all modes possible, should I get a Magna Force 900 that have all that built in or should a pay for the upgrade for the XForce XT-400, will the XT-400 with the mods work better the Magna Force 900?

I wrote here last week about the lawsuit that the local utility here in Cincinnati has threatened me with. I consulted a attorney and after looking at the law he advised me that the utility could sue me for because I do not have a FCC license. I will be taking down my CB antenna from the house. The main reason I am not fighting the utility is because of the cost of defending myself in a lawsuit.
I really can't believe the responses I received with my question here last week, but I know it is important for others to know about my experience.
Maybe some one with the money will be able to stand up against the utilities

  I wrote here last week about the lawsuit that the local utility here in Cincinnati has threatened me with. I consulted a attorney and after looking at the law he advised me that the utility could sue me for because I do not have a FCC license. I will be taking down my CB antenna from the house. The main reason I am not fighting the utility is because of the cost of defending myself in a lawsuit.

Get your entry level hammie license, then the utility company has to fix their interference to you. It's the best fix and the cheapest. Even if you never use the license, it's good insurance.

Unless I've missed something along the lines - "I" am taking it you're in the US, the last I heard from way back when is that CB's no longer required a "license". So how can they sue you for operating without a license when the governing body of radios, doesn't require one? According to Part 95 - which still does exist, you're very eligible to remain on the air and talk. Your attorney may be a smart man, but it ticks me off when people who have no knowledge of radio, issue opinions such as that. They need to research that which they have no knowledge of, before issuing an opinion or trying to defend one. I don't know, I think I'd be contacting the FCC on that issue. I can't see that they can force you off the air. Maybe you don't have money to pursue a lawsuit, but you can certainly seek out the aid of your elected officials. "I" think you DO have a case. Go online to the FCC website if you don't have a copy of Part 95, to view it online. Print out a page of it, which shows you no longer need the license. E-Mail them while you're at it. Let them know what you've been told. Don't just lie down and let them bull doze you over. CL

If you are operating within the law then you are operating under FCC authorization. A ham license is another form of authorization, but a legal CB station is no less legal just because it doesn't require a license. However, you need to be more specific -- under what law (USC, CFR, state or local law) does he claim is being violated?

Here in Spokane, Gonzaga provides legal help for people in pickles like your's, and many of these students are real go-getters. You might have a similar program at a law school near you.

They can't shut down all the CBers in the city. Either you are kicking out too much RFI (and you may not know it), or there are a lot of other CBers in your area that are just as pissed off as you. If the latter is the case, you might think about contacting them and pooling your defensive efforts.

Have you actually received one of these?
Has anyone you know received one?
If so, could you post a scan?

I'm very concerned about this, I'm in Muncie Indiana, not all that far from you, and apparently we're next. I'm a ham, but I agree legal CB stations have every right to be protected from interference coming from part 15 devices.

Like it or not, CB and Ham radio are both in the same pot this time, and it's getting warmer.

This battle is likely to be won however, by complaints of interference to low band VHF public service frequencies, and airports.

Yeah but it's typical on USENET. A cease and desist letter WRT BPL is something new and everybody's troll alarm goes off. As another poster suggested, a scan of the letter would be interesting to see as we're all going to have to deal with this sooner or later, at least from the way things look now. No announcements of BPL roll-out for me yet, but the same company (Progress Energy) is doing trial runs in another city nearby so it's only a matter of time.

Good luck.

Our Fire Departments here in this county, all operate on the VHF LOW band. A few counties around us also operating on the low band albeit a different frequency were recently with in the last couple years, either bumped up to 800 MHz or are working on it. To some extent they do still operate on low band, but more so the 800 MHz. Now our county is looking at 800 MHz. I have to wonder since no real reason is ever offered, if it is because we're being "pushed" to 800 MHz to allow the BPL to come in so as not to interfere with any current users of Low Band. Also, with everyone being pushed to 800 MHz, sooner or later, it is going to get really crowded. I read one article from a reputable source stating it is already a problem due to get worse. Geee, how about that. What they also don't consider is many of the "volunteer" departments are hurting now. To have to buy new equipment, is not always cheap. In this case, we're talking going from low band to 800 MHz. So, we'll need a base, x amount of mobiles, portables and perhaps pagers. LOTS OF CASH! While our department isn't too bad off financially, the one up the road from us will die instantly with that kind of a crushing blow. Our radios and pagers are all within 4 years old. They're still using a base radio from the 50s. I know, I"ve seen it myself. These people in the upper echelons need to stop and think about the havoc they're playing with many issues, not just one. I still think this is a troll, but...

If an attorney said they could sue you because you don't have an FCC license, that attorney is an idiot and knows nothing about telecommunications law.

The reason you could be sued is because in the US anyone can sue for anything.

That does not mean they can win or that such a suit will even be heard by a court.

If the utility were sending out such letters, the FCC would be interested.
Send the FCC a copy.

this could be a good thing... just think, if the bpl people have the resources and time to track down one single supposedly legally operating cb station and shut it down, just think what will happen when they move into neighborhoods with the illegal power over processed splattering monster amps dueling with each other! let the bpl people track them down and sue them off the air! the fcc doesn't have the time or money, but maybe the bpl people do.

now, if you believe that they could pinpoint one cb station as the cause of bpl problems, and that they have the resources to start lawsuits over every one of them, you have been succesfully trolled in my opinion.

yeah, but bpl was/is legal under part 15 as it stands the way i understand it. the nprm was supposed to be to make it easier for bpl to satisfy part 15 by raising the radiation limits and maybe some other stuff... but apparently some areas are going ahead either with their temporary experimental license or just under the existing rules.

Hey, don't knock it. I make money off attorneys all the time. If you ever want to do I.T. work, do it for attorneys. They're used to being billed top dollar.

If not, you picked the wrong attorney.

This is blatant and complete malpractice UNLESS you neglected to tell us something, such as
a) you're operating outside of CB frequencies
b) you're operating with more than permitted power for your CB frequency

> I will be taking down my CB antenna from the >house. The main reason I am not fighting the utility is because of the cost

Ask your local hams for support. They, like me, would be outraged at a power company bullying you around. They, like me, will PayPal financial support to you IF you are using legal power on legal frequencies.

There are people with money willing to contibute to a competent defense.
If you get an attorney who's not a ham, you have incompetent defense. If you want to stand in the middle of the road and let the truck run over you, well, that becomes a personal preference, which is something I will not interfere with.

What, they don't have the right to talk on CB as you like to enjoy on your ham? With out getting into a flame war over legalities such as linears, extra channels and so on, in my opinion, if the guy is operating per part 95, then he has every right to be on the CB. Your opinion isn't helping the war between CB/Ham. Sorry, I strongly disagree with your opinion. I don't do CB now, but I cut my teeth on it and I know many good and decent CBers.

When I lived in Reno, NV there was a person who was not very friendly on the radio. He was always getting drunk and once he was full of liquid courage, would swear, throw dead carriers, drive the drivers and us locals crazy. So a cb/ham operator made a device that was real small,,,it was placed in close proximity to his house, within 1/4 mile. When he would key up on ch-19, it would start a audio carrier that was intermittant,,it was like a pulse for 5-7 minutes, he would key up again and once again get this pulsating tone, is the best way to describe it. Needless to say he cleaned up his act, and started to come around. So now I am in willamette valley (oregon)and have the same problem. the person who made that "toy" has passed on,so now I am looking to get something of the same concept made. Any ideas? JPT.

To be honest with you, it is better not to organize any club or organization, because there is too much riff-raff going on.

From living on Long Island, N.Y., until 1986 and here in Nevada, my friends and I who organized CB clubs on Channel 18 (27.175 MHz) were victimized by troublemakers who jammed frequencies, T-hunted (tracked down signals), made threatening telephone calls in the wee hours of the night, gave out classified personal information (unlisted telephone numbers, Social Security numbers, credit history, etc.) and damaged CB antennae/coaxial cables. In fact, three CB/ham radio operators in the Las Vegas area were notorious for terrorizing the community back in the 1980s and 1990s by committing the aforementioned offenses.

The best bet is to use the CB radio for occasional or emergency use. The CB is convenient when contacting two or more people at once -- especially when you or they are out on the roads. But if you're going to organize 24/7 clubs like we tried to do years ago, or just like what a well-known Long Island CB/sideband club did on 27.005 MHz LSB back in the 1980s, then you're a walking bull's-eye, because you'll become a target for stalkers, psychos, crack addicts, jammers and other misfits who have nothing better to do than cause trouble. I know that firsthand, and so do my friends. Since I went 10-7 back in 1995 and have talked on the CB occasionally since then, I have not received the problems I did when I was a frequent user.

The good thing about online chat rooms (voice and mIRC) is that those who cause trouble with the group are kicked out and removed from the rest of the group. That you can't do on the open airwaves. If you want to find friends in your area, go searching around in PalTalk or mIRC for people in your area. If they seem decent, then you can chat with them publicly or privately; if they are troublemakers, then stay away from them and not invite them into your group.

Tom,

Buy or borrow a current Element 2 study guide, then go out and find a VE session and take the 35 question Technician class exam.

Are you covered by the blanket "authorization?" (ilo a licence) Yeah, probably...but with $10 and about two days worth of Q&A review, you're covered. Any questions, please use my e-mail address. (Remove NOSPAM) Take care and good luck.

In my area, we called these little devices "Bush Boogies". A cheap and dirty method to make one, is to purchase a cheap Radio Shack kid's walkie talkie, which is still on the CB band (Not 49 Mhz or FRS), put a transmit crystal in it for the desired channel, wrap the PTT button with duct tape, and toss it in a nearby bush close to the idiot's antenna.

A small 100 mW transmitter like this usually has enough radiated power to plug the ears of the idiot's station. If they can't hear, they can't fight. A 9V battery usually will last a week or so, after that, you will have to retrieve it and change the battery. Or else run it with a higher capacity battery source.

This was a very effective idiot control tool for us back in the 70's.

You're not far away from me (small world), and I agree with your assessment on the traffic situation on CB. The closest local group to me is in the Pottstown area, and they run on Channel 21. But they run hot and cold, and many of these guys are the "roger-beep/echo box/distorted amplifier" types. Lots of hot air, but little substance.

I've heard sporadic activity on other channels, but nothing approaching the regularity that I was used to from "back in the heyday".

Well, I'm not a lawyer, but it appears to me that the lawyer is wrong. BPL operates under part 15, which means it must accept all interference.

It is very difficult to gather personal information from CB conversations unless you provide it for them. It is alarming just how much personal information is inadvertently given out over a period of time. CB'ers should be conscious of this and not talk about such things.

I've been involved in the tracking down of idiots over the years, and the most we were able to get were names, addresses, and (if listed) phone numbers. If these troublemakers can get more information than that, then there is a breakdown in the security of the databases which hold our personal information. This should be alarming for many other reasons, as abuse of this information is not limited to CB operators.

I've never run into the level of "radio terrorism" that you've described. I guess this is a region dependant thing. Most of our bozo's had way more bark than bite, and most of them vanished like a puff of smoke, when their identities were exposed.

I certainly wouldn't let paranoia ruin an interest in radio. I agree with you about not going through the effort of forming a formal club, but for different reasons. My reasons have more to do with the fact that most people want to "do their own thing", and don't want to be part of a group, unless it's very loose and informal. Also 85% of the work, get's done by 15% of the members, and this invariably leads to internal strife.

It's ok to have weekly "coffee breaks" or maybe a group party or trip, which doesn't require much more planning than to just show up and pay your own way. But I wouldn't go much farther than that.

These "poser" internet pseudo CB chat rooms just don't hold the same appeal as actual over the air conversations. There's something to be said for a little background static, and the desire to customize your radio station, and the fact that you don't need some company's common carrier to create your medium.

Like I said previously, this can be remedied by a day or two with an Element 2 Q&A study guide, (I'll gladly mail you mine.) $10, and a visit to your local VE team. Good luck, although you'll likely not need it. Your ham antenna can also be your CB antenna. My Imax-2000 is used for both 10, 12 & 11. (Some even use it for 20m) Remember, you're anticipating the removal of Element 1 (Morse code) for the Technician class license.

Agreed. Stay straight and fly right and you have a leg to stand on.

Don't do it. That's just what the large utility companies love. The FCC also loves the large utility comapany's dollars so reread what I wrote above re. your choice of a communications attorney.

Some here are understandably skeptical because this newsgroup is commonly sowed with troll posts. Unfortunately you've reaped the results. Even if this were a troll, the only thing lost is a little time and some typing effort. If not, then I hope you heed the good advice that's been offered and prevail.

I cannot impress upon you enough...do NOT hire a ham who is intimidated by the FCC. Hire a competent communications attorney (Who may also be a ham.) who can direct you in the most prudent course of action.

I had stated in an earlier post, that so long as he was Part 95 compliant, he had nothing to worry about.... IF they insist on taking him to court, let them. He will win in the end "with" the FCC in his corner. They have to uphold their own R&Rs. Part 95 is one of them, regardless whether a license is needed or not, which by the way - "they" - did away with the requirement of. IF he ends up in court with those people, he could have a nice stock holding when it is all said and done. Suing for legal fees, damages, emotional distress - just for starters. Yep, the lawyer gave bad advice. See someone who knows radio. I'm sure there are many people who would stack up in your corner if this hits the fan. CB or Ham, it affects us all. This is one time we need to stand together. There is no room for separation. United we stand, divided we fall. CL

I'm not so sure it is the FCC he is going to have to worry about since it was "supposed to be" the Utility company doing the threatening. As for the FCC, so long as the guy is Part 95 compliant, I'd find it really difficult for them to go against their own Rules and Regulations to satisfy someone else. That isn't to say it isn't possible, but it would sure put a lot of mud in their face. Definitely, a "communications" attorney is in need here. IF they shut down a "legal" operation according to their own R&Rs - man I'd have a field day with that in the media. I'd be contacting the local Congressman and anyone else I could muster. But again, I don't think the FCC is the enemy, since (if memory serves me correct) it was not them who made the threat.
I think they too would be interested to hear about this. I mentioned damages in my prior post that he could go after. Sitting here thinking, I'm wondering if the Power Company would go so low as to try to claim he never paid his bill's, or had some problem with the wiring and shut off his service to get even. Man, I'd really ream them out with that, if they forced him into the dark. You may have a real fight on your hands, but so long as you're Part 95 compliant - you should prevail in the end. CL

We do need to stick together in this against a common enemy. CBers have as much right as we do to radiate a signal.

I'm sure that the ARRL doesn't require you to be a ham to join, and they can find a good attorney who will help, maybe even pro bono (free). It won't hurt to ask them.

Rules of Life

Sometimes we need to remember WHAT the Rules of Life really are.

1. Never give yourself a haircut after three alcoholic beverages of any kind.

2. You need only two tools: WD-40 and duct tape. If it doesn't move and it should, use the WD-40. If it moves and it shouldn't, use the duct tape.

3. The five most essential words for a healthy, vital relationship are
"I apologize" and "You are right."

4. Everyone seems normal until you get to know them.

5. When you make a mistake, make amends immediately. It's easier to eat crow while it's still warm.

6. The only really good advice that your mother ever gave you was: "Go!
You might meet somebody!"

7. If he/she says that you are too good for him/her - believe them.

8. Learn to pick your battles. Ask yourself, "Will this matter one year from now? How about one month? One week? One day?"

9. Never pass up an opportunity to pee.

10. If you woke up breathing, congratulations! You have another chance!

11. Living well really is the best revenge. Being miserable because of a bad or former relationship just might mean that the other person was right about you.

12. Work is good, but it's not that important..

13. And finally; Be really nice to your friends and family. You never know when you are going to need them to empty your bedpan.

If the monkey ain't happy, nobody's happy!

I find it interesting as well, especially from the perspective that preliminary tests of BPL had concluded that it was way too prone to outside interference (as well as generating it), and the unpredictable nature of that interference rendered BPL unreliable as a practical service.

Evidently, if this case is true, it would seem that the "BPL Pushers" are trying to strong arm radio stations off the air. While CB'ers do not require a license, they are authorized by rule, and if they are in compliance with Part 95, they have every right to operate as if they were any other licensed service.

Albeit that more than 98 percent of the troublemakers on the CB are just plain idiots who belch, throw carriers, jam and cause minor mischief, the ones who terrorized me and my friends were much more sophisticated. For example, the three CB'ers in the Las Vegas area who T-hunted signals knew from within the police and other law enforcement agencies some people who were able to run makes on vehicle license plate numbers. From there they were able to retrieve Social Security numbers, dates of birth, unlisted telephone numbers, etc. All three of these individuals had loved ones who also worked in banks. My friends and I personally heard bank account numbers, credit card information, PIN numbers and other information being given out on the CB channels. An informant who worked undercover for the FCC, as well as a state law enforcement agency that was constantly jammed and its officials harassed and threatened, felt the brunt edge of the attacks back around 1993 or so, when one of the three troublemakers blew his cover. The informant, who held an N7 ham radio callsign, not only received death threats over the phone, but threats of his wife and daughter being gang-raped and sodomized. Eventually, his entire bank account was liquidated a few days after some ham radio operators conducting surveillance upon two of the three suspects in question overheard a plot to liquidate his bank account. The informant's residence was later ransacked and his truck was damaged beyond repair. When the informant went to the police, FBI and other officials, he received nothing but the runaround. To make a long story short, he and his family were forced to relocate a couple states eastward, where they currently reside. Law enforcement reports at least five other CB-ham radio operators who had their bank accounts liquidated by this one particular troublemaker who not only had ties to law enforcement officials, but was almost always released from custody after being arrested. Hundreds of ham/CB radio operators in the Western part of the U.S. know who this troublemaker is.

This had transpired in the Las Vegas area from 1982 until about 1998 or so, until hundreds of frustrated and irate CB'ers and ham radio operators threatened class action lawsuits against the Federal Communications Commission and law enforcement for not intervening and prosecuting these individuals. To make a long story short, all three of these troublemakers were eventually run out of Dodge, as the tables were eventually turned on them.

If you live in a rural area, you may not have too many problems. But if you live in a densely populated suburban area, such as I do, then you do have the potential to experience problems. The CB/sideband club that operated on Long Island back in the 1980s and early 1990s had rogue members who made telephone death threats, T-hunted, stalked others and were able to find personal information. This is one reason why my family and I had to leave New York. Instead of going 10-7 and using the CB radio occasionally, I found the same problems here when I faced similar problems. It took me a while to realize that it is not worth being the subject of radio terrorism. I eventually hung up the mic and chatted with my former CB friends online, where I feel much safer and more secure.

There always has to be a balance. You have to keep your guard up when you're on the CB radio. Common-sense practices must kick in when you're on the CB. Don't give out your last name, street address, phone number or other information that troublemakers can use against you. Don't badger, intimidate or threaten the troublemakers. Just go to another frequency or turn off the radio. I strongly advise against 24/7 clubs. If you talk for an hour or two at night to just shoot the breeze on a certain frequency, that's OK. But being on the CB for hours and hours each day, or trying to build a dynasty on a certain frequency, is a bit excessive.

Same here. Although I have had some good friends on the CB, I have also had those who I found out were nothing but trouble. It took me a while to find out that a few were drug addicts, child molesters, right-wing militia-type wackos, etc. They initially appeared as mild-mannered, Dr. Jekyll people who try to be your friends, but then the Mr. Hyde, or their true colors, were revealed. I don't have time to explain all of the bizarre details that affected my group back then. Overall, if and when I have children, I would discourage them from using the CB radio, except under strict adult supervision.

True. There is no "DX" to worry of, anyway. That can be a drawback to an avid CB enthusiast. I remember the thrill and excitement I felt when I was shooting skip from Long Island back in the early 1980s. Having a firsthand taste of exotic cultures -- complete with hundreds of different languages and dialects worlwide -- as well as hearing fellow CB'ers from all seven continents and establishing contact with those from six of seven continents was phenomenal. And that was back in the days before we had voice chat rooms and Internet as we know it today. Since the advent of the Internet, CB'ing and DX'ing hasn't been the same for me.

Amateur Radio Newslin(tm) Report 1385 – February 27, 2004

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1385 with a release date of Friday, February 27, 2004 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

RESTRUCTURING: A COUNTER PROPOSAL TO THE ARRL

Just as we all thought it was quieting down, restructuring of the United States Amateur Radio Service is front and center once again. This, as a small group that opposes the quantity over quality approach takes a massive counter proposal to the FCC. The group is headquarted in Florence, Alabama and Amateur Radio Newsline’s David Black, KB4KCH, is at our South-East Bureau in near-by Birmingham, with more:

Robin Gist, K4VU, listened to the ARRL’s plan to restructure amateur radio and didn't like it.

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

--

Gist and five other hams who make up a group called the Radio Amateur Foundation, drew up their own plans for restructuring ham radio. Their 59-pages of suggestions are now in the hands of the FCC. Gist calls the Foundation's petition a comprehensive plan for progressive and thoughtful restructuring. The group suggests taking the Technician class license, making a few changes, and turning it into amateur radio's entry level license. Gist is not pleased with the League's plans for the Technician license:

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

The group suggests giving Technician class hams restricted HF privileges. And it strongly advocates keeping the code--5-word-per-minute Morse code proficiency would be maintained for General and Extra class licenses. Keeping Code, Gist says, is important to help amateurs provide emergency communications.

Under the foundation's proposal, the Novice and Advanced licenses would no longer exist. Current Novice and Advanced license holders would automatically be upgraded to the next category--a novice would become a Technician and an Advanced class ham would become an Extra.

Another big change comes in amateur radio testing under the Foundation's plans.

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

--

The Foundation suggests not releasing question pool questions to the public.

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

Gist believes hams should have to wait at least 10 days before taking a failed amateur radio license test again.

--

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

--

Gist says amateur radio should be quality over quantity. A service of radio operators who have a sense of value and appreciation for amateur radio. That is what Gist says the Foundation's goals are really all about.

From the Southeastern Bureau in Birmingham , Alabama, I'm David Black, KB4KCH, for The Amateur Radio Newsline.

While there are well over a dozen restructuring proposals already before the FCC only one has really gotten any major attention of the ham radio community. That’s the plan offered up by the A-R-R-L and referred to by Gist. As we go to air, no Rule Making designation has been assigned by the FCC to the Foundations regulatory change request. THE BPL FIGHT: WHAT HAMS CAN DO

Meantime, the story that refuses to go away has yet some new twists. Of coarse we are referring to the imminent introduction of Broadband Over Powerline Internet access, and the massive interference that ham radio operators believe it will create. Amateur Radio Newsline’s Mark Abramovicz, NT3V, is here with the latest:

Now that the FCC has released the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking in the Broadband Over Powerlines issue, it's time for amateurs to look it over, digest it and begin composing a well-reasoned letter or e-mail.

So says Jim Haynie W5JBP the American Radio League's president. Here are some things in the filing you might consider.

"Noise levels, potential interference both ingress and egress. Those are things that need to be addressed, " Haynie says. "Public relations: What's going to happen when you get on the air on 20 meters and you knock 10 of your neighbors off line all of sudden? They call the local power company, it's a public relations nightmare."

Haynie says once you decide to write that letter, keep in mind it has to be supported with facts.

"I don't see much water being drawn if somebody writes a letter and says, 'Well, this is good for this and it's good for that and it's going to interfere with my ham radio hobby and stuff.' I never, ever use the word hobby to anybody in the Washington. It's the Amateur Radio Service," Haynie says.

"And what you've got to do is use a little bit more fact, a little bit more of concrete-type evidence that you can conclude on your own. And that's pretty simple to do. It's got to be well-reasoned arguments. It can't be emotional argument."

And, once you've finished the letter or e-mail, Haynie says make a copy or print a copy of what you've prepared.

"Put it in an envelope with your QSL card and send it into your local representative at his district office, not in Washington but his district office," Haynie advises. "I'm just amazed how much power that letter has to your local congressman and your local senator when you mail it to one of his local district offices."

Haynie continues to express disappointment the FCC failed to wait for a report from the National Telecommunications Information Agency. The agency oversees radio spectrum use by government agencies and services, including the military. He says its technicians have been busy at BPL trial sites across the country.

"We know that they've done over 18,000 measurements over the last four months in the various (BPL) test areas," Haynie says. "We have gotten actually photographs of their trucks, we've seen them working hard at it. And that's what surprised me that the commission rolled this out before the information was made available.

"We were told by NTIA that it would be available the first part of this year. Now in government-speak, I don't know what that means. I know we got, the League's got petitions sitting up in the commission now since I took office as president in 2000. It is 2004 and they're still sittting on somebody's desk.

"So, FCC and NTIA, I'm sure, have their own timetables and they're not going to worry about what the ARRL or what some ham radio operators think about it. They're going to do their own work in the own way in their own time."

Haynie hopes the NTIA finishes its work soon and gets its report to the FCC pronto. He says it's clear BPL is targeted for special FCC attention.

"I think they'll put this on the fastest of fast tracks and get something going," Haynie says. "Typically, the window, the comment window will be 45-60 days. I'd be really surprised if they gave it 90 days.

"And, once that's done they start the wheels in motion and they'll (FCC) be under tremendous pressure from industry to get this thing out the door."

Haynie says the amateur radio service has allies in this fight and he's confident they will submit comments or speak to their congressmen or senators. Haynie says he's both cautious and optimistic about the outcome.

"I'm very concerned because I've seen the speed at which this thing has happened," Haynie says. "And I've seen the comments that the commission has made and I've seen the denials that the industry has made.

"And it just doesn't make sense. There's something more behind this. And I know people are going to say it's the almighty dollar. And that's true, it probably is. You're looking at millions and millions and millions of dollars of investment here.

"But there's something that just doesn't smell right, I guess, is what I'm trying to say. So, until I get a better handle and the League - our staff people get a better handle on where this is going and trust me we're on top of it every day - I'm just going to be to on the little plus side of a little cautious."

And finally, Haynie says to those who think the ARRL and other hams are overreacting like Chicken Little who cried out: The sky is falling! The sky is falling! He has these sobering thoughts.

"Just because we want, doesn't mean that we get our way. And I'm concerned about that," Haynie says. "And I'm concerned about another possibility that's probably the horror of all horrors.

"And that is if the (BPL) rollout is so big and you get tens of hundreds of thousands of people on, suddenly amateur radio relegates down to the same level as Part 15. That would be the most horrible thing that could happen to amateur radio."

THE BPL FIGHT: A WIN IN 4X4-LAND

Even though the BPL outlook looks a bit grim here in the United States, there has been a big win over in Israel. Hagal International says that equipment for the networking of computers over the A C power mains being sold in the country was found to be causing interference to High Frequency spectrum users. As a result, Israel’s Ministry of Communications requested an explanation from the distributor of this equipment on how to remedy the problem. The distributor did one better. The company replied that it had discontinued the sales of the interfering devices. (Hagal International)

RADIO HONORS: W. VA GOVERNORS FATHER WA8AYP REMEMBERED

Here in West Virginia, Governor Bob Wise strolled into his reception hall last week to present a check to Kanawha County officials. Little did he know that those officials – and some amateur radio operators – had a very special surprise for him.

The money, fifty thousand dollars, was awarded to the county for the purchase of amateur radio equipment for the metro area’s new emergency operations center, and a new mobile command post.

As he usually does when speaking about amateur radio, Governor Wise began to reminisce about his father. He recalled hearing the sounds of CW from his father’s Hallicrafters receiver wafting into his bedroom at night. He even remembered his father’s amateur callsign, WA8AYP. At that moment, his attention was directed to a nearby FT-847 to receive a message.

Audio only: Hear it at www.arnewsline.org on the MP3 audio file of this newscast.

That’s control operator Bill Hunter, K8BS, telling the governor via amateur radio that his father’s callsign is now the club callsign of the Kanawha

County ARES/RACES group. The announcement was not only a complete surprise, the governor appeared clearly touched. After a moment, he quipped, “Hey, do I get a QSL card for this?” He was quickly presented with a specially designed QSL card. After the ceremony, the governor signed copies of those cards, and posed for pictures with the estimated 75 ham operators in attendance.

The surprise was the brainchild of Kanawha County Commission President Kent Carper, W8CHS, who appears to be one politician who can keep a secret.

Robert Wise, Senior became a silent key in 1986. He was active in emergency communications during the 1960’s and 70’s. (ARNewsline(tm))

RADIO HONORS: FCC NAMED TO RECEIVE NCAI LEADERSHIP AWARD

The FCC has been named by the National Congress of American Indians to be the 2004 recipient of it’s prestigious NCAI Leadership Award. The regulatory agency was selected based on its outstanding leadership and ongoing commitment and support to American Indians and Alaska Natives.

The National Congress of American Indians gives only three of these awards annually. One goes to Congress, one goes to the Administration, and one goes to another deserving entity. This year's recipients are House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Richard Pombo of California, the US Commission on Civil Rights, and the FCC. (FCC)

HAM RADIO TESTING: QPC WITHDRAWS A GENERAL TEST QUESTION

The Question Pool Committee of the National Conference of Volunteer Examination Coordinators has announced the withdrawal Question G5B11 from the Element 3 General class question pool. The QPC says that the question deleted asked what would be the RMS voltage if you combined two or more sine wave voltages?

According to QPC Chairman Scotty Newstadter, W4WW, the withdrawal refers to question G5B11 in the new, December 1, 2003, released General pool. It is not referring to the same numbered question in the pool that expires at midnight, June 30, 2004. (QPC, W4WW)

ENFORCEMENT: JACK GERRITSEN, EX-KG6IRO IN JAIL

Californian Jack Gerritsen, the ex-KG6IRO, will be spending time in jail, but not for his alleged interference to ham radio repeaters in the Los Angeles area.

On Monday, February 23rd, Federal Court Judge Carolyn Turchin sentenced Gerritsen to 30 days in jail and ordered him to pay a $2500 fine on a tresspassing charge. In passing sentence, judge Turchin explained that she could not place Gerritsen on formal probation as the U-S Attorney asked, because he was going to spend his entire sentence in jail with no time left for probation. The Judge told Gerritsen that he has until May 15th to pay the fine or a lien will be placed on his home in the city of Bell.

Gerritsen’s alleged harassment of area repeaters had brought numerous letters to the court asking that it bar him from operating any sort of radio transmitter. In a statement to the court Judge Turchin noted that she had read many of the notes sent to her by the amateur community but that she would not be able to take them into consideration for this case. This was because the charges were brought because Gerritsen failed to obey a sign in the Courthouse and entered a door to the roof of the building.

Judge Turchin did say that she she would forward all the letters to the Federal Probation Department to be put in Gerritsen’s file. The ex-KG6IRO was then taken into custody by U.S. Marshals and escorted away. (ARNewsline(tm))

WITH THE ARRL: LEAGUE LOOKING FOR COMMENTS ON VHF+ CONTESTING

The ARRL is looking for input from VHF and UHF contesters to help improve the radiosporting events they take part in. According to a posting top the VHF Reflector by New England Division Director Tom Frenaye, K1KI, for the last year or so the League has been studying ways to increase interest and participation in VHF and above contests and awards. Now its ready to go further and it is inviting the ham community to take part. We have more in this report:

Tom Frenaye, K1KI, heads up the ARRL's VHF-UHF Contest and Awards Subcommittee. He says that changes to the contest rules and awards programs should be designed to do three things. First, to encourage more people to work more other people. Second, to bolster the number of QSO’s made over longer distances. And lastly, to encourage more people to just join in and participate.

Because of this, there are now some recommendations coming from those in the ARRL who have studied the situation. These incclude making changes in the QSO points and rover rules. Also under consideration is limiting the June VHF QSO Party to the bands from 50 to 1296 MHz only, expanding the Microwave contest based on 10 GHz Cumulative and dropping the current UHF contest. Added would be new contest categories in January, June and September.

Frenaye notes that these major recommendations, and a number of minor ones, are still just that -- recommendations. He says that the ARRL feels it is now very important to have further input from the VHF and above contest community before proceeding. He asks all contesters interested in these bands to take an in-depth look at the preoposed changes and then to respond. He hopes that a lot of you will.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I’m Norm Seeley, KI7UP, reporting.

You can e-mail your ideas and comments on or before March 7th to vhf-contest-proposal@arrl.org. (K1KI via VHF Reflector)

CW SAVVY: A MORSE CODE SYMBOL FOR THE "AT SIGN"

Computer fanatics who also like operating C-W listen up. Radio Currents Online for February 16th says that the International Morse Code is being updated to include a new character for the "at sign". In December, the International Telecommunications Union voted to create the character which will be known as a commat. The commat is made up of dot-dash for the letter A and dash-dot-dash-dot which we all know is the letter C. The two characters are combined with no space between them giving Morse code web surfers an easy way to send an e-mail address or the location of a webpage. (CGC)

HAMS HELPING HAMS: THE MIKE NEWBOLD, K0YO FUND

A fund to help 6 meter rover operator Mike Newbold, K0YO. It was set up by a group of hams who value Newbold's contributions by putting his life on-the-line to get rare grid squares on the air. And late last year it almost cost him his life. Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, has the rest of the story:

According to a posting on QRZ.com made for Phil Krichbaum, N0KE , Mike Newbold, K0YO, was vacationing in Baja Mexico just before Christmas 2003. He was savagely beaten with a pipe, robbed and left for dead. The same thugs also killed two Canadian surfers who were camping about 100 yards away from Newbold and threw their bodies and those of their dogs over a cliff.

Kirchbaum says that Newbold crawled 3 kilometers on his hands and knees through cactus and over rocks to a road where he had a better chance of being located. Some surfers from Los Angeles found him the next day. They took him to a medical facility and contacted the police. They then transported Newbold back to California for further medical treatment. Newbold then went back to Steamboat Springs, Colorado, where his son took him for additional medical care and then home for a Christmas eve dinner. Kirchbaum says he has since visited Newbold brought him a 2 meter F-M radio donated by Bob Ludtke, K9MWM. Thats where he learned that the value of items lost and stolen in Baja easily exceeds $10,000.

To help defray the cost of replacing Newbold's pick-up truck, camper and ham radio gear that he and Gary Yantis, W0TM have established he Mike Newbold Fund. If anyone would care to make a donation to help get Newbold back on the road to rare grids, please contact W0TM or N0KE. Their respective e-mail addresses are gyantis@midtec.com and pfkski@vail.net.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, in Los Angeles.

That’s the voice of Tony Whitaker, G3RKL, as he begins his pre-announced trek from Invercargill to Blenheim. What’s amazing is that recording comes to you from the other side of the world. During his stroll Whitaker will be on the air using the special callsign ZL6SHS. And -- you will literally find him operating everywhere including HF, VHF and UHF. And when access to an IRLP or Echolink equipped repeater is available, he just might pop up in your back yard, eager to say hello.

So, keep an ear open for Tony Whitaker, G3RKL, as ZL6SHS as he jauntily saunters the length of New Zealands South Island. He might be coming to an Internet linked repeater in your hometown and right to your H T.

Utility company experimenting? -SHOCKING-! How do you think they will test bpl? Major dollars are at stake. If you live in an urban area you could find yourself in the same battle.

Think before you run your pie hole about 'just another Cber.'

I openly tell you that I run an S-Line Collins on the freeband, but never AM, cuz the S-line don't have it.<yea> I've also told you what antenna's I run, my full name, and the town I live in.

I've also told you I don't have neighbors around me, so no one ever complains about rfi. My gear runs clean, I've also told you I can watch tv with the rabbit ears in the shack at 1K. Collins rocks.

You keep re-posting what I admit too, is this a new strategy or Unitl they come knocking on the doors of amateurs too. Lets face it, there isn't too much difference between the 11m and 10m bands as far as frequencies go. And amateurs usually run lots more power than the average CB'er. And the 10m band isn't the only one that will wreak havoc with BPL. The 20m band has as much a chance of disrupting that Part 15 service and people routinely run 100W or more while rag chewing via voice or pounding out code.

Steve:

So far as I know, it's not illegal to jam an illegal signal. Examples of this are when "cb'ers" jump above 28 Mhz into the 10M band.. Perfectly legal to start calling CQ in CW right over the top of them. Same goes for BPL, if it's interfering. When it does, it's operating illegally (it's under Part 15), so when it does bleep out datacomms, if HAMs transmit through it and cause it to stop transmitting data, so be it. No laws broken there.

So what's the problem?

Were not talking about Cber's transmitting on 10 meters, so knock yourself out.

Jam that bpl line, and you too can battle them.

No problems.

I agree, but the utility company may have an experimental license to test the BPL system, making the signals legal even if the service hasn't yet been established. Something to check.

Since BPL falls under part 15 of the regs, they don't need a license.

Is the CB radio active in Nassau or Suffolk County? Here it's extremely dead, except for an occasional truck driver on Channel 19. Ten years ago or more it was a totally different story here. But because the riff-raff drove the decent people away to ham, GMRS or online, it's dead at nights here in Las Vegas.

Speaking about property, here in Las Vegas the houses are built so close together that you can actually climb to the roof of your by climbing someone else's. There is very little space between houses, even though we have enough desert to go around. Outside the metropolitan Las Vegas area (Las Vegas, Henderson, Boulder City, North Las Vegas, Summerlin, etc.), it's still open land. Furthermore, most new homes built here are part of some type of homeowners association. Most of these organizations forbid the use of CB and ham antennae placed on the roof of the house.

To be frank and honest, sometimes I wish I had enough money to buy the same house I lived in when I was in Levittown. The 60'x100' property is spacious compared to the houses here, which are like Brooklyn and Queens in the desert. Also there I can set up my CB antenna without any neighbors or homeowners associations giving me any guff about it.

I'd bet they don't always wait for the permit, just like cement guys. ;)
They need to find out how bad it is, and they control the power lines, so experimenting would be fairly easy..just wait and see how many complaints you get, or how many relay stations don't key up.

Simple scary math. Them boys are up to no good, I'm tellin' ya!

Frank:

Experimental licensees still may not interfere with radio comms on bands and/or frequencies for which they are not the primary license holder. HAMs are the primary users of the bands BPL is supposed to be interfering with. Still a non-issue.

The power companies will find out soon enough that their cash cow is poor when they get all the complaints of dropped file transfers, pages not loading, etc... and when they turn up the "power" levels and interfere with HAMs some more to make their customers happy, they'll be fined by the FCC for interference. Riley won't let 'em get away with it, and I certainly won't in my area either.

If it becomes a problem on 20M, or 40M, or 80M, or even 160M, I'm a holder of a license that gives me PRIMARY user privileges on those bands, and I'll transmit right through it to make my contacts, with whatever power levels are necessary to make the contact (up to legal limit), and if the power company complains, that'll just be too damned bad.

Just my two cents.

Actually, it's a perfectly legal 10 (and maybe 12) meter amateur radio. Shows how much the "eBay police" know!

They really don't need a license. If your "legal" transmitter causes them problems, by part 15:

Sec. 15.17 Susceptibility to interference.

(a) Parties responsible for equipment compliance are advised to consider the proximity and the high power of non-Government licensed radio stations, such as broadcast, amateur, land mobile, and non-geostationary mobile satellite feeder link earth stations, and of U.S.
Government radio stations, which could include high-powered radar systems, when choosing operating frequencies during the design of their equipment so as to reduce the susceptibility for receiving harmful interference. Information on non-Government use of the spectrum can be obtained by consulting the Table of Frequency Allocations in Sec.
2.106 of this chapter.

It is their responsibity to minimize the problem, moving to a different frequency if needed. I haven't been able to find records of a "legal" station being ordered to cease transmiiting and then losing the case in court. There is one that I know of in the Dallas area, but it hasn't went to court yet.

Having an Amateur license certainly wouldn't hurt your case.

Even worse, the utilities companies are petioning the F.C.C. to change the part 15 specs to allow more "bleed" than what is presently allowed by part 15. Its going to be a real problem for every radio operater swl, cb and amateur.

Just a thought..... Electrical interference from power lines <not considering BPL> is usually able to be tracked down with out too much equipment. So, my question is - at the points of the "leaks" of the electrical interference - it seems to me, would be the same locations BPL would be "most" noticeable. Any other opinions? CL.

An Amateur license could and maybe would help, but again....IF he is operating a Part 95 station..... such that they have no faults against him, then they have little choice than to abide by their own Rules and Regulations. If they go against that which "they" have set forth, that wouldn't hold much water either. CL

Hey, all...

I'd like to buy a CB for long car trips, of which I take plenty. I'm not having any luck finding any sort of buyers' guides on the web. Can anyone point me in the right direction?

Thanks!

Before the

Washington, D.C. 20554

In the Matter of)

Palco Electronics, Inc.) File No. EB-04-DT-062

Southgate, Michigan) Citation No. C20043236003)

CITATION

Released: February 20, 2004

By the Enforcement Bureau, Detroit Office:

This is an official Citation issued pursuant to Section 503(b)(5) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended ("Act"), to Palco Electronics, Inc.
("Palco") for violation of Section 302(b) of the Act, and Section
2.803(a)(1) of the Commission's Rules ("Rules").

On February 10, 2004, Palco offered for sale at their store located at 18676
Eureka Road, Southgate, Michigan, the following non-certified Citizens Band ("CB") transceivers:

Ranger Communications American Spirit (SS-3900 EGHPA) $199.99

Ranger RCI 2950 DX $269.99

Ranger RCI 2970 DX $399.99

Ranger RCI 6900F Turbo $454.99

Ranger RCI 2985 DX $439.99

Ranger RCI 2995 DX $589.99

According to the Commission's records, these devices have not received an FCC equipment authorization which is required for Citizens Band transmitters marketed in the United States.

3.

Section 302(b) of the Act provides "No person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section." Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that ". no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) In the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled.." Palco's offer for sale of these devices violates both sections.

Palco marketed these devices as amateur transceivers. The Commission has evaluated radiofrequency devices similar to those listed in paragraph 2 and concluded that the devices at issue are not only amateur radios but can easily be altered for use as CB devices as well. A CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service, and it must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation. The Commission has further concluded that these devices fall within the definition of a CB transmitter and therefore cannot legally be imported or marketed in the United States. See Response from the Commission's General Counsel to U.S. Customs Service dated May 17, 1999, 14 FCC Rcd 7797 (1999).

Additionally, dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certificated under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states "..([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services..will not be certificated." See also FCC 88-256, 1988 WL488084 (August 17, 198 . This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id., and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

Furthermore, the Commission has revised Section 2.1204(a)(5) of its Rules to prohibit all marketing and/or offering for sale in the United States of such devices even when the purchaser(s) had provided assurances that the transceivers are being bought solely for export. ALL DOMESTIC MARKETING OF SUCH DEVICES VIOLATES THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, AS AMENDED, AND THE COMMISSION'S RULES.

7.

In addition to the marketing of the non-certified transceivers addressed above, Palco is hereby warned that Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.815(c) of the Rules requires FCC Type Acceptance (or Certification) of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies below 144 MHz. Furthermore, Section 2.815(b) of the Rules prohibits the marketing of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies between 24 and 35 MHz.

Subsequent violations of the Communications Act and/or the Commission's Rules may subject the violator to substantial monetary forfeitures not to exceed $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation, seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal sanctions including imprisonment.

Palco may request a personal interview at the Commission's Field Office nearest your place of business. The nearest office is the Detroit Office, 24897 Hathaway Street, Farmington Hills, Michigan 48335-1552 , which you may contact by telephone at (24 471-5661. You must schedule this interview to take place within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation. Alternatively, you may submit a written statement to the above address within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation. Any written statement should specify what actions have been taken to correct the violations outlined above. Please reference case number EB-04-DT-062 when corresponding with the Detroit Office.

10.

11.

The Privacy Act of 1974 requires that we advise you that the Commission will use all relevant material information before it, including any information disclosed in your reply, to determine what, if any, enforcement action is required to ensure compliance. Any false statement made knowingly and willfully in reply to this Citation is punishable by fine or imprisonment under Title 18 of the U.S. Code. Please be advised that if you choose not to

HAM RADIO IN SPACE: HELP FROM DOWN-UNDER IN REVIVING AO-40

The AMSAT Oscar 40 ham radio satellite is still missing in action, but more international help in bringing it back to life is coming almost every day. The latest is from down-under as Brett Dawson, VK2CBD and the team of Australia's Parkes Observatory lend their support to AMSAT Germany in the recovery effort. Q-News Trevor

Teague, VK4BAT, reports:

A 4 MHz wide spectrum with centre frequency of 1097 MHz was scanned with high level technique in order to find the LO frequency of the AO-40 L1 receiver. The fact that nothing was heard of the L1 receiver's LO does not lead to the conclusion that AO-40 is completely dead. The receivers of Parkes are not really fitted for frequencies below 1.25 GHz, and naturally one does not know how good the L1 receiver's LO is shielded or how much of the signal would go through the antenna to the outside world.

As previously reported, the main battery pack that powers AO 40 is believed to have short circuited keeping the auxiliary battery from powering the bird. As this newscast goes to air the rescue effort continuing. (Q-News)

ENFORCEMENT: FCC SEEKING INFORMATION ON ALLEGED FELON HAMS

Back here in the United States, our FCC wants to know if several people on a list it has are felons convicted of an array of very serious crimes. The agency's Daryl Duckworth, N-N-Zero-W, explains:

Duckworth: Seven inquiry letters were sent to individuals thought to be licensees who are incarcerated on felony convictions listed on sex offender registration lists or (who) recently served prison sentences for felony convictions. In these cases, the names match our license records and preliminary information is that the subject is the same person listed in our database.

These inquiries seek first to establish whether that is the case, and, second, to determine what affect the offense has on the qualifications to retain a Commission license.

This has been Daryl Duckworth, NN0W, reporting.

The FCC did not provide names but it did give conviction information and the locations and offenses. The list includes hams believed to have been convicted of offenses ranging from sexual abuse to child molestation and even murder. (FCC, RAIN)

RADIO LAW: JUDGE ORDERS TECHNICAL TESTIMONY IN ALLEGED JAMMING CASE

A Wisconsin federal judge has refused to close the courtroom for testimony by employees of Motorola during the trial of a defendant who allegedly tried to jam police and fire communications. on several occasions last year. In denying Motorola's motion, Judge John Shabaz said on February 27th that the right of Rajib Mitra to a fair trial outweighs Motorola's right to protect its trade secrets.

According to the Madison Capital Times, attorneys for Motorola had argued national and local security concerns as reasons that it did not want public disclosure on how its radio equipment was allegedly jammed by Mitra. The government planed to call five Motorola employees to explain how its Smartnet II radio equipment can be disrupted. Motorola claimed this not only exposed its trade secrets but also placed at risk the lives of law enforcement officers that depend on the proper functioning of their radio communications systems.

But assistant U.S. Attorney Tim O'Shea opposed Motorola's motion, as did Mitra's attorney. Christopher Van Wagner argued that removing the public during his client's testimony would prejudice the defendant. Judge Shabaz agreed with the prosecution and defense. He overruled the Motorola request and ordered the employees to testify noting that no one in the public is coming to his court to find the formula to jam radio frequencies. He noted that this kind of technical testimony can be removed from trial transcripts when they are produced.

Mitra's trial was to began on Monday, March 1st. He faces two charges of using a computer to interfere with police communications. If convicted on both counts he faces up to 20 years in prison. (Capital Times)

RESCUE RADIO: EMERGENCY COMM GENERATOR STOLEN

I'm Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, with a late breaking story. Dateline San Antonio, Texas where, last Saturday night, February 29th, the San Antonio Radio Club had one of its trailer and generator systems stolen.

Paul Guido, N5IUT, reports over the Public Relations remailer that it was a 12.5 Kilowatt Onan unit. The club's biggest and best generator.

A police report has been filed that includes some very good pictures of the trailer with the generator on it. If you have any information on its where-abouts, please contact Paul by e-mail to Pguido2003a@broadwaybank.com or call the San Antonio police.

The San Antonio Radio Club has been a Bexar County, Texas, emergency communication resource since way back in 1919. (N5IUT)

THE BPL FIGHT: THE 11 METER CB ANGLE

Over the past several months we have been hearing about the potential interference to Amateur Radio that's expected if the FCC proceeds with the rollout of Broadband over Powerline Internet access. But ham radio is not the only service in the 2 through 80 MHz spectrum where B-P-L will operate. Shortwave broadcasters are concerned that their audiences will disappear if they cannot be heard over B-P-L generated noise. Also, a number of emergency communications networks have told the FCC that their vital communications will negatively impacted as well.

The one service that nobody has talked about is 11 meter Class D CB radio. An unlicensed service at 27 MHz with millions of radios crammed into 40 overcrowded channels with many operators running far more power than legally allowed. This week, Amateur Radio Newsline's Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, looks at CB, B-P-L and the collision between the two that may not be to far away.

If those who want to bring us Broadband Over Powerline thought amateur radio operators were going to be a nuisance to their plans, they may have an even bigger headache on the horizon. Citizens Band radio operators could prove to be the biggest threat to B-P-L.

The FCC defines CB as a private radio service that doesn't require users to have a license. It hasn't for years. The FCC pretty much gave up regulating the spectrum. It asks users to enjoy their radios but to stay within the five-watt power limit of most of the radios.

But since the FCC gave up trying to keep track of those operating on 27 Mhz, problems have mushroomed. A class of CB operator has emerged who likes to use high-power amplifiers to talk with people several states away.

How powerful? If you check out some of the CB websites, you'll find amplifiers being sold that push the envelope well beyond the legal limit - say 500 watts, 1,000 watts, even 5,000 watts and higher.

Many contemporary electronic appliances, because of poor RF shielding, are susceptible to interference caused by overmodulated CB signals.

The FCC could find itself in a real quandry if the B-P-L industry demands help in going after those who push the limit and disrupt their systems. Imagine the complaints.

Because the FCC can't go to a database to help it find abusers or offenders, it's going to be a difficult if not impossible - task to track these illegal operators.

Will the industry end up funding the FCC's enforcement effort? That would be unprecedented.

Let's be clear: Not all CB operators are outlaws.

Many use their 11 meter radios for personal communications on trips, on hikes, on fishing expeditions. And, yes, the truckers are still big users of the spectrum.

But if you search the worldwide web, you will find CB sites with postings from folks who boast of their radio exploits and their amplifiers and contests.

The websites, of course, take no responsibility for the information or material posted in forums or message boards. They describe them as strictly for entertainment or educational purposes.

Some education the B-P-L industry is sure to get; perhaps a crash or will that be clash course in CB radio.

For now, we'll have to watch and wait.

CBers say they're watching, too. And some of them are vowing no one will stop them from operating as they please.

Stay tuned. For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, in Philadelphia

THE BPL FIGHT: CINCINNATI WATCH OUT

Meantime, Cincinnati Ohio may be among the first to have Broadband over Powerlines across the entire area. This, as a division of Cinergy Corporation announces plans to offer high-speed Internet service over its power lines.

According a March 2nd release, Cinergy Broadband is pairing with the Maryland based Current Communications Group to offer the service in parts of Cincinnati this year. Plans also call for an expansion into Kentucky and Indiana as the regional system grows.

Cinergy says that it hopes to initially market the service to 55,000 of its 1.5 million customers. A second venture will bring the technology to smaller municipal and cooperatively owned power companies, covering 24 million customers across the United States. The companies are committing more than $70 million to the effort. (ZD Net via Media Network)

ENFORCEMENT: CONGRESSIONAL SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDS HIGHER FINES FOR INDECENCY

A congressional subcommittee has acted to substantially increase the fines assessed broadcasters who break indecency rules. Some legislators also say that repeat offenders should lose their licenses.

FCC officials have maintained for years that the current maximum fine of $27,500 is too small to serve as a deterrent for large broadcasters who view the fines as a cost of doing business. Now, under a bill recently passed by the House Internet and Telecommunications subcommittee, monetary forfeitures issued by the FCC would be increased by a factor of ten to $275,000 per violation. The cap on the fines would go to a maximum of $3 million.

There is yet another possibility being floated among legislators and one that could come up when and if the bill hits the House floor. That would be to hold performers and others appearing in the electronic media directly responsible for their own words, much the same way as is done in other radio services including ham radio.

But one law maker has cautioned to enlarge the scope of the proposed legislation to far. Representative Fred Upton cautioned that lawmakers should be careful not to expand the bill to the point where it might run afoul of free-speech rights guaranteed by the Constitution. If that happens, Upton says that it could very well buckle under its own weight. (Published news reports)

RADIO LAW: FCC SAYS IT TIME FOR LOW POWER BROADCAST RADIO

The FCC says that Congress should lift the restrictions it has placed on the introduction of low power FM broadcast stations. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, is here with the rest of the story:

In a February 20th statement, the FCC said that its inquiry shows that low power FM stations serving highly specific audiences in small areas do not interfere with the operations of large broadcasters. Also, that they will not keep audiences from hearing the higher power commercial stations as the industry claims.

When the FCC first suggested creating the low power or community radio option. commercial broadcasters and public radio stations complained. The argued that low power stations would interfere with reception of their signals Congress responded by setting what amounted to an R-F no-man's land between the low power stations and existing broadcasters. This severely limited the number of tiny stations that the Commission could license.

Lawmakers also told the FCC to study the potential for interference. The agency spent several years doing just that. It has now concluded that stations running between 10 and 100 watts pose little risk to commercial stations whose power levels can be upward of 100,000 watts effective radiated.

Currently, there are about 300 low powered F-M stations on the air. Most are licensed to churches, school districts, youth organizations, highway departments, environmentalists and the like. By comparison, the nation's largest commercial broadcast radio chain, Clear Channel Communications owns 1,200 stations so far.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, in Los Angeles.

ON THE AIR: WYOMING STATION DX TEST MARCH 14

Meantime, a full power radio station is in the news and its a good news for hams and S-W-L's who like listening for rare ones on the A-M band. On Sunday, March 14th, radio station KEVA, 1240 kilohertz in Evanston, Wyoming will conduct a D-X test to find out how far its signal can be heard.

According to Lynn Holman reporting over the Broadcast Employees remailer, the test will take place from 12:00 - 1 a.m. Mountain Standard Time and will consist of numerous Morse code I-D's emanating from a C-D created by Doug Smith, W9WI.

For a conformation card please send your reception reports with return postage to Michael Richard, KEVA-AM, P.O. Box 190, Evanston, Wyoming. The zipcode is 82931. (B.E.A.N.)

CHANGING OF THE GUARD: BAND LEADER ALVINO REY, W6UK - S.K.

Ham radio's changing of the guard continues. This with the sad news that Alvino Rey, W-6-U-K, has passed away.

Ray was 95 when he became a Silent Key from pneumonia in Sandy, Utah on Tuesday, February 24th. Best known as a swing-band leader of the '30s and '40s he was also an inventor and tinkerer who pioneered development of the pedal steel guitar. This instrument, and his ability to make it sound like it was talking became his musical trademark.

Born Alvin McBurney, in California he grew up in Cleveland Ohio. After beginning his music career in New York he changed his name to Rey in 1929 to capitalize on the then popular Latin music craze.

Rey and his orchestra gained national fame with the 1942 hit, "Deep in the Heart of Texas." Nearly 25 years later, Rey was again in the national spotlight when he was featured for several seasons on ABC Television's "The King Family Show."

Ham radio wise, Ray loved to operate all modes, and, according to posts on the V-H-F reflector, was particularly fond of 6 meters. He was also active on all of the the high frequency bands over his many years in the hobby. (K6LAE, published news reports)

WORLDBEAT - USA: BIG ANTI-PIRACY WIN

A federal judge in San Francisco has ruled that a software program that copies Digital Video Discs infringes on the copyrights of Hollywood studios. Judge Susan Illston ruled that software made by 321 Studios of Chesterfield, Missouri violates the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act. This law prohibits the circumvention of anti-piracy measures such as the Content Scramble System protecting movies on DVDs. Judge Illston ordered the company to stop making or distributing such software within seven days of her February 20th order. (News reports)

THAT FINAL ITEM: THE ORIGIN OF ELECTRONIC SPAM

And finally this week, a brief lesson on something we dread every time we check our e-mail. You know what it is. Unwanted junk e-mail that people have come to call Spam. Ever wonder why? Here's Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, with some details that probably very few people know:

We all know that Spam is the trade name of a canned meat product. At least I suspect that most of you do. But have you ever wondered where the phrase "spam" in relation to unsolicited junk e-mail came from. Well, blame it on the computer nerds who were fans of one of the worlds greatest comedy ensembles.

It seems that the term began being applied to junk electronic mail in the early 1990's by computer geeks. It was based on a 1970 Monty Python skit in which an exasperated restaurant customer is urged to order the meat until she screams: ''Stop it already. I don't want any Spam!''

And that was it. And now you do know the rest of the story.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline. I'm Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, in the City of Angels.

To which Ill add the rhetorical question: How many of us open our e-mail boxes each day and want yell the same thing? (Tnx to Q-News, CGC, others who sent this item along.)

Not familiar with any cb buyers guide off hand,,,,try google or post what you are looking for in a unit. SSB or strict AM? Listening to the truckers for road conditions and the like, or are you looking to talk? My neighbor drives across state for a commerical delivery service in a panel truck and I just set him up with a walkie-talkie and foot-high mag mount,,,,all he's interested in is hearing where the cops are so he can hammer down,....this set-up works works perfectly for him.

Thanks for the reply. I'm just a little befuddled by all the features (ie 23 channel vs. 40 channel) and whatnot. I'd definitely want to talk, since
I figure that's part of the "keep a guy awake on long trips" side of things.
I don't want to drop a ton of dough, just in case it's not for me, you know?
What's the advantage to single side band?

So I guess I'm looking for an inexpensive unit that covers the basics well and is good for a beginner.

23 channels are no longer manufactured. 40 channel is standard. Sideband operation gets you much greater range opposed to AM and is great fun once you get the hang of playing with the clarifier knob to tune everyone in. To open or "unlock" the clarifier will allow you to slide and deviate your transmit a bit above and below frequency.....this usually would not be necessary but the majority of ssb operations today are either hammie rigs, exports, or cb's with modifications (like an unlocked clarifier) resulting in transmissions not being fixed to a frequency, thus the "tracking" of a signal is often necessary when in sideband mode. Opening the clarifier is illegal according to the FCC and their law pertaining to cb radio within the US of A. It's a law akin to tossing your aluminum can in the garbage when you're supposed to recycle: like an old blue-law, not enforced and only the truly deranged get excited about such behavior.

Uniden makes a great sounding cb,,,,affordable and reliable,,,entry level with no bells and whistles can be had for under 50 bucks delivered. I'd add a power mic.

I'm looking to buy a weather alert radio that has the local restrictions. I can't remember what they are called, but it doesn't blast you out of bed for a river valley flood warning that is 50 miles away.

Do you guys have any recommendations?

Thx.

You're ticked because Hams have a system like Echo-Link that you can't use and abuse like 11m when you please. You have to be a licensed Ham, something you're not. Besides CBers don't have any thing like it for two reasons, one most aren't smart enough to implement a system like that, and second many like you have no respect for rules and would end up wrecking the usefulness by your abuse of the system if there was one.

Also with software like Win 2K Pro and XP Pro a feature called terminal services comes in real handy. Set up a server running terminal services with a rig control program and a VoIP app with the sound card interfaced to the speaker and mic jacks on the rig and you can have a lot of fun. Put the rig in VOX mode to work with the VoIP app and the sound card interface is simple. Then from ANYWHERE you can log in to the server, start the rig control software and the VoIP app, and now you have a nice remote base you can operate just as if you where sitting at the controls. In fact there is a complete Ham station setup this way complete with amplifier and antenna rotor control on the Internet. As and example I could sit at the computer in my office and play radio and not have to worry about where to stick the rig, antennas etc.

Here is a thought - there are never tornados in the Caribbean. :-)

I lived what, about 20 miles from you when I lived in Stow? I don't think I ever saw a tornado the entire time I lived there.

No you don't. CBers have no rights at all. You come under a 'unlicensed class'. That means you must accept any and all interference.

If you are so much in the right, then tell me why the LOCAL COPS can come in and shut you down?

Can't do that with the hams....we have real licenses. And are protected by Federal Laws.

You, on the other hand, are nothing but bandits trashing up the spectrum.

Again////if you don't like it....get over it...Facts are Facts.

YOU ARE SO WRONG! CBers are protected under Part 95 as we are Part 97. Cops don't just rush in and shut them down. Not anywhere that I'm aware of. Maybe in your dreams. Climb off your high horse before someone knocks you off some day. Tomorrow wouldn't be soon enough from the sounds of it. And, I AM A HAM! I do NOT do CB anymore. Haven't since like 10 years ago. But again, THEY have as much right as we do. YOU need to get a life. CL

They do in Spokane. A few years ago the police chief himself (Terry Mangan), while off-duty, shoved a shotgun the the faces of some CBers just because they were parked in front of his house.

Yeah, right. Next time you hear a CB type running high power out of band, tell me again that they are "protected."
They do NOT have as many "rights" as we...insofar as band spectrum is concerned.
Take your own advice...get a life.

Ok, so there is one case... question is, was it "radio" related as to why he did as he did? Sounds like more to it than just being "CBers! Even if it does happen, I'm sure they are exceptions rather than a "common place" type of thing. Which was the point I am really making. I have a real problem with believing that a part 95 compliant radio is "just" snatched up out of no where for "no" reason. CL

But was it because they were CB's or because they were a group of people parked in front of his house? Perhaps CB had nothing to do with it.

In the 80s, it was their steadfast opposition to creation of a codeless amateur license class.

Today, it is Broadband via Power Lines (BPL.)

In earlier times, hams were known for being on the cutting edge of technology. But in recent years, hams are known for repeatedly trying to stand in the way of new technology.

Sad irony, isn't it?

Which proves exactly what? I never said it was a legal CB radio. I stated, correctly, that it's a perfectly legal AMATEUR radio. And it is.

LOL, you childish little man. The radio is not illegal; it's a perfectly legal amateur radio.

No reason for him to remove it from this newsgroup. There are many licensed hams who browse here: There's the faggot DouGay Arair N8WWM, there's the idiot Georgie-girl Busch WA3MOJ, the list goes on. Maybe they're interested?

Here's a suggestion: If you're so freakin concerned about these things, why don't you losers get together and buy up all those so-called "illegal" radios and amps and take them out of circulation?

The codeless thing is one thing. Many good things came from the creation of the codeless Tech. The other two items are different although! LEOs would have meant losing spectrum within the Amateur spectrum. BPL has the potential to cause incredible interference! If you do some research into these topics, you will be amazed.

No, the sad irony is that your to damn ignorant to understand what BPL is, and what effect it could have on your CB or shortwave receiver. Grow up, its not a ham versus CB thing, BPL could be something that effects everyone.

Take a few minutes and read what BPL is and what effects it will have on everyone that enjoys using a radio.

Amusing! Here is another way to deal

it or advocates deployment of the same

Under new FCC rules the 'policing' of CBers can be accomplished by the local police. I.E. If they are trashing up my TV. I can call the police and the cops can take them off the air as a nuisance.

Actual Amateur Radio licensees are exemp because why???? Because we hold a valid Federal License. Point counter point...cj?

Don't believe it CJ? Check it out.

How come I never heard of you until this group was linked to the 'cb' group?
Tells me a lot. I don't have a clue you say?

Get on the 'freeband', piss off your neighbor, and watch the cops shut you

They have been testing BPL in Birmingham for a LONG WHILE. Im ready for it.
Got my KWs ready, Antennas pointed at the point where the 'BPL repeater' will be. Lets see them get through that.

And you think CB is immune to BPL? You really are stupid.

Look for any weather radio that has S.A.M.E. in order for it to be programmed properly you'll need to know your county FIPS code but that can be found online.

try this link

www.weatherradiostore.com

You can also get regular scanners that have this feature.

hey no problem, I just remembered I have a CD that has the FIPS code for every state and every county state code is 39 and your county code is 103, Also some weather radios will allow you to enter several codes, in other words if you want to hear alerts for neighboring areas, like the ones that would get hit before you would so you have advance warning.

I was working in Wellington Ohio this week and Oberlin. Since I was so close to you I thought about stopping by then you can show me your think I will, unannounced.

Not yet. I would have trouble hearing it with the S9 plus power line noise Alabama Power puts out.

No he's not, here's the OP. Show me where it says anything of the sort.

I wrote here last week about the lawsuit that the local utility here in Cincinnati has threatened me with. I consulted a attorney and after looking at the law he advised me that the utility could sue me for because I do not have a FCC license. I will be taking down my CB antenna from the house. The main reason I am not fighting the utility is because of the cost of defending myself in a lawsuit.
I really can't believe the responses I received with my question here last week, but I know it is important for others to know about my experience.
Maybe some one with the money will be able to stand up against the utilities that are now selling BPL access and sending out cease and desist letters

Tom

Then -your reply was "just another CBer, who cares?"

From what I've read, you've already had at least one run in with the power company. Bet they can't wait to bpl your ears now. hehe

Airports? Do they use 2-80 mhz much? Airplane radios typically use 108-137 mhz, which I wouldn't expect to be affected ...

You're right about that. Even commercial broadcasters have come out against BPL. I believe that one country has already pulled the plug on it nation wide.

When I find myself in the area again and I have time to spare. I'm not going to make a special drive there just to stop by your place. However I thought about stopping by, since I was in the area, but I didn't have the address with me. I figured it would take me about an hour to drive from Oberlin to your city, if you really do live in Medina Ohio. And I have to be sure about that before I'll even bother about the drive out there.
All I need is a street address, or you have a listing in the phone book so I can call information to get it. Next week I'll likely be working in Elgin Illinois, which is north west of Chicago, so it maybe a while before I'm out your way again.

Oh, one more thing, what is the main course of study at Oberlin college anyway? It seems funny to have a big college in such a tiny dump of a town in the middle of nowhere like Oberlin. They have a nice park in the town center with the college buildings around it, but there isn't much of anything else in town to recommend it.

Talking about weather radios and the like, my parents just called me.
said they saw me on the 6:00 news, I guess a couple of local tv stations had crews at the SKYWARN class today, shows how observant I am, never even saw them there hehe.

Most aircraft I'm aware of operate from 118-136. The weather stations and at least here locally - railroads are in the 160 MHz region. CL.

BPL is more likely to affect VHF public service bands than aircraft bands.

Which is "probably" why they've been busting their asses to move to 800 MHz in many places. OR "forced".. If it failed in other countries, why must they try to follow suit? One can only guess that the electric bills will have to be compensated to pay for it. So, in the end, we'll be paying for what? A BIG MESS..... So what else is new? I'm not sure when it was, but I read a while back that a Texas based Cable TV company was forced to shut down it's system when the leakage was interfering with Aviation ops. So, with mixing and such, I supppose it may be possible for the BPL to do the same. This really ought to get interesting. CL.

Everyone I've ever had, or that the local government offices had Amazing.

It's kind of ironic, actually, that Ebay considers 2950's bad enough to be removed, but easily modified VHF radios which can be used to interupt important frequencies, like police, fire and EMS continue to be sold. Do a search for IC-2100 and see how many are offered modified, or with the ability of the seller to modify after the auction.

Oops, but it WAS sold. Guess it slipped through Ebay's hands! :)

BTW - An ISP doesn't give 2 sh*ts if you're selling "illegal" radio equipment. They are not technically knowledgable enough in radios to make a determination if you're doing something illegal with them. Besides, they want to continue to collect your fees every month. No need to kick someone off for a petty "offense" as that.

Here in Providence there is no money to buy new radio system for police and fire. Right now PFD is on 154.something, and PPD is on 441.600 and up.

As to the cable system - yes indeed leakage has to be contained. They can interfere with pretty much anything but aviation. For example, cable channel 18 sits right in the middle of the 2m band. And I know Cox in RI is leaking because I hear a dead carrier of about S3 on that frequency.

I'd love to see Cox shut down for that.

Well, I can say one thing for sure, IF they force this county to go 800 and the county doesn't get enough funds to help out the stations and police to switch over, there are going to be many police and fire departments hurting big time. I know one right now that will be done - period. They are struggling as it is to stay afloat - in man power and equipment. In many more ways than one, when you look at the big picture it seems some forces/departments are being squashed - purposefully. The bar just keeps getting raised. BPL could be just the tip of a big ugly iceberg. Yes siree, it sure is going to get interesting to say the least. IF BPL does as much "widespread" damage as is thought - boy, the infrastructure - communications wise - will be flushed right down the toilet. Not a pretty thought. CL funny you should say this. you act like one(a cb'er that is!).

also, some former cb'ers (like me) got tired of dealing with the overcrowded conditions and the overall flakiness of the band. We (as former cb'ers) went up, took the test (btw, when I took mine, it was a lot harder than the ones they administer these days!), aced it and then awaited my ticket.

There are some people that I miss down on 11 and there are some I don't. However, since I don't have the equipment to go down there and say Hi, I don't go down there.

As an operator, I am not substantially any better (or worse) than most. In fact, I tend to lurk (listen) more than talk. Besides, a closed mouth gathers no foot.

Not true if the CDer is operating legally. The COPS have the authority to enforce FCC rules...NOT to simply shut down any CBer because that CBer is causing interference to TV. The expectation of the FCC when it made the ruling it did, was that the TV interference problems with CBers was from illegal stations (illegal high power)...not with legal 4 watt CB stations.

The point Dan made, however, was not completely accurate as I note above.

IF the CB station is legal...the locals have no authority to shut the CB station down.

So is the legal CB operator.

IF and only IF they are operating ILLEGALLY...which, if so, means they are not really CB at all.

Where i live in Buffalo N.Y. a few years back a friend of mine was visited by the local police and was told to stop transmitting because he was interfering with the computers next door although he was running a legal cb rig.The company complained to the FCC who said they were short handed and did nothing about it.So in came our police and scared him into paying big money for filters which he should not have paid for in the beginning.

note: ALL IC2100s (and most other 2m rigs) come with the ability to wideband. Clip a single diode (in the 2100 I think it's D16, on the back of the display board) and you have xmit from 138 to 174 MHz. But this is nothing new; most amateur radios have had this capability for a long time.

> Big difference the icom is not in widespread use by bootleggers and the 2950 is.

As usual, you proudly and publicly display your total stupidity and abyssmal ignorance: The most common rigs "in widespread use by bootleggers" are Icoms, Kenwoods, and Yaesus. The FT101 series was legendary on 11 meters, but more Kenwoods, Icoms, and even Alincos are showing up these days.

Geez, $153 for a Ranger 2950? Good price for the buyer, and worth every penny.

I can picture that...you screaming about your rights as you're being told by some overly zealous, RF ignorant cop to shut down. No, you'll do as you're told. You will win in the long run (court), but you will do as you're told or you will go to jail.

Actually I have been fighting them for 5 years now about their line noise problems. Notice I said problems.

Over this period of time the company has assigned a engineer from Birmingham to work DIRECTLY with me. Which he has done.

They have purchased new equipment and even sent this engineer to ARRL classes in Newington on RFI. He is now quite good at locating it.

In the period I have been working with him, about 2 1/2 years now. He has done yoeman service and has found MANY sources of RFI. All of which have been corrected.

In fact right now the latest one was recently cured and I am now tracking, what I hope is, the last one. I expect him to be out here again this week or next, to try and locate it.

So, you are right. Alabama power definitly knows me. And they know the have to clear up their noise. It is against the law to have such a high level. It takes time, and I happen to be in a rough area.

But now when the wind blows my neighbors don't lose their power. And wires dont hang loose and endanger children walking around the poles. And it is so much more quiet on HF now.

As for BPL, this same engineer tells me he was involved with the testing and can NOT see any future for it.

I believe that is 145.25 . Just make it your new simplex frequency all around the COX area. Set your gear for tone squelch. And trash their entire system.

IIRC, that website has been around a _long_ time, and its URL is quite often posted by folks in the news.admon.net-abuse.* newsgroups when

That's because the part of your brain that should be concerned about this issue has been erased by tightly focused selective amnesia brain

I think it had something to with top-posting being righteous and just.

try taking a look at the ubiquitous 555 timer chip - one could rig the thing so that it would key up a radio upon recieving a carrier that was above a certain level - something like taking the signal from the s-meter and using it for a trigger signal works real well, and ensures that only the local area gets qrmed. naturally, the interval it keys up for is up to the builder, with the 555. Another interesting thing is , that if this is placed real close to the guy's house, very little power will be needed to operate it. a motorcycle battery would last a long time at a 100 milliwatt level.......... and if close enough, would give him 20-over s-9. Think i remember someone doing this once, but cant remember just who it was... <G>

Perhaps so, but it doesn't change the law.

> So, the get busted, the go off the air, the courts get to sort it out.

Did you mean to say: So the CBer gets busted, goes off the air, and then the court gets to sort it out? If yes...

The cops can't bust a CBer just for being on the ait. The cops have to bust someone and charge that person with one or more specific violations of FCC rules. Causing interference to BPL or any other service using a legal CB rig and antenna is NOT against any FCC rule.

> Still its end of problem. One less CBer trashing up the spectrum.

Huh??? Even if the cops confiscate a legal CB rig, that does NOT prohibit the same CBer from buying or using another one.

Now for a reality check...just how many local cops have actually taken any steps against any illegal or pirate CBers? I'm guessing next to none...much less a legal CBer?

Cheers,

Cops can't stop you or anyone ele from doing something legal.
They may get a person to stop today, but unless they confiscate the equipment, that person can be on the air again 10 minutes later.
Now if the cops confiscate, they better charge the person with a specific violation pretty damn quick.

> No, you'll do as you're > told. You will > win in the long run (court), but you will do as you're told > or you will go to jail.

Go to jail for what? The cops have to charge arrest a person toi put the person in jail...and that requires a specific violation to be charged. Another aspect is that the cops aren't the sole arbiters of if someone gets arrested. The local prosecutor will likly be consulted before any "RF ignorant cop" is given free reign to arrest someone for an FCC CB violation.

This argument sort of parallels the scanner in the car argument. A cop may not be aware of the rules/laws regarding such item - i.e. a ham having a scanner in the car when he is permitted by law. He busts you for it. YOU have your day in court. To sit there and argue with them in ANY case, is stupid. You exercise your rights to the judge. As long as HE is not on the take and reasonably competent, he should find you innocent. Let's face it fellas, there are HUNDREDS of laws out there. It is hard for them to know ALL of them. Especially on the street in a moments' notice. CL

How would you know CL? Your just a CBer. You claim to be a ham, but offer nothing to prove it. You don't even talk like a ham.

If it squaks like a CBer,
If it talks like a CBer,

Its a CBer.

I don't intend on showing up if your not home.
Back in high school the older brother of my sister's friend got shot with a deer slug while trying to rip off some guys wheels in Detroit one night. Believe it or not he sued the guy that shot him and collected a cool $250,000, and this was back in 1973/74, so this was a big chuck of change. Of course he walks with a big limp now but he's rich from using the money to buy and run his own auto body shop bis.

I.E. Bootlegging. And Tim they are not priate
bands as you well know.

continue bothering us cb'ers

And if stupid CBers like you stuck to the legal 40 channels and 4 watts us Hams wouldn't be getting a bad name from be identified as illegal CBers. The general public can't tell the difference a Ham antenna or a CB one, and think anybody with a big antenna is a CBer. Many reports of interference are caused by CBers running power and modified radios while the Ham get the blame in the public's mind.

You mean you're busy hijacking radio spectrum that you are not licensed to use.

Anyone who fraudulently takes my tax dollars is no friend of mine. If you're well enough to post messages on Usenet, and threaten people on the airwaves every day, you're well enough to get off of your lazy ass and get a job.

Based on what reasoning?

Even if a local cop was dumb enough to do that, any 1/2 brained attorney would have the charge dropped in a heartbeat... if the prosecutor didn't do it first because of the inapplicability of the charge to the situation at hand.

In the case above, let's assume the CB activity isn't mobile, but rather from a fixed station in your home. In that case, the cop has no basis at all to do anything more than knock on your door and talk to you. Without a warrant to search, the cop has NO ability to enter your home at all. To get a warrant, the police need the OK of a judge...which isn't done for just any reason.

> You exercise your rights to the judge.

I'd suggest it won't even go that far.

Any decent prosecutor wouldn't even let it go that far.
Proosecutor's don't like losing cases and probably wouldn't press any charges at all.

And the cops don't give a hoot about CB. There's no police glory in it.

BUT, do it once and the cop gets a warning from the prosecutor to stop wasting his time. Additionally, how does the cop gain entrance to a home to arrest anyone based on what knowledge of a CBer being on the air?

Of course you ignore the fact that the original poster was talking about the Icom IC2100, which can be modified to operate in hi-band VHF on frequencies that are not open to amateurs. Since you have zero comprehension, allow me to help out: He said that it was stupid of eBay (and yourself) to waste so much time on radios that MIGHT be modified to work on CB when it's so easy to modify a 2 meter amateur radio to operate where it shouldn't. And, of course, you have no intelligent comment to make, so you keep spewing trash. I agree with the poster that it's probably a whole lot more serious for someone to get on police or fire frequencies with a 2 meter radio than it is to get on CB with a 10 meter radio.

Beside which, you have been proven powerless to stop the sales of what you erroneously call "illegal" CB radios.

Now you can tell me what I (or anyone else) know, when you prove repeatedly that you don't have a freakin' clue? Gawd, what a clueless dumbass you are.

The Ranger is a 10 meter radio, which can be modified to operate on the 12 meter ham band as well. Anything else is pure speculation on your part, dimbulb. Maybe you used one on CB, but they're not made for that purpose.

Again, the most common "bootleg" radios on CB are Icom, Kenwood and Yaesu. I don't see you shutting down sales of those radios anytime soon. But, of course, you haven't shut down the sales of Rangers or Unidens, either. And that bothers your tiny little ego something fierce, doesn't it, little man?

Wrong again. As usual, numbskull. I wouldn't even know how to contact them. But I bet you're a charter member!

same rules apply to all, and the powers that be say ignorance of the law is no excuse if someone breaks the law, well that applies equally to the law enforcement people. If I were in a situation where I was fined or arrested when I did nothing wrong, they would be made to pay for that error.

Every radio hobbyist should be opposed to BPL; it will end the hobby as we know it.

Don't forget their steadfast resistance to incentive licensing, which was only bypassed by an act of congress! Of course they stand in the way of progress. What was the last breakthrough hams came up with?
Packet? Slower than hell and useless. IRLP? It's internet radio all over again; not even close to being true amateur radio.

No wonder most people don't give a damn about ham radio.

Actually, the concept of god can neither be proved nor disproved. Any evidence for the existence of god is purely subjective. Any evidence against the existence of god would be a futile attempt to prove a negative.

ILLEGAL CB TRANSCEIVER LIST

The FCC's Office of Engineer and Technology (OET) has evaluated the devices listed below and has concluded that these devices are not only amateur transceivers but can easily be altered for use as Citizens Band (CB) transceivers as well. As such, OET has further concluded that these devices cannot legally be imported or marketed within the United States for the reasons discussed below. Further, the FCC General Council has issued a decision in a specific case involving one manufacturer and has concluded that dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue may not be approved under the Commission's rules and are in violation of several rules including the RF power level limits of 47 CFR 95.639. (letter from Christopher J. Wright, FCC-OGC to John F. Atwood, US Customs Service, dated May 17, 1999).

Transceivers used in the Amateur Radio Service below 30 MHz do not require FCC authorization prior to being imported into or marketed within the United States, but transceivers for other services, including the CB Radio Service (CB), do require Commission approval.
The transceivers listed herein and other similar models operate in the amateur "10-meter band" and are often referred to as "10-meter" radios or "export" radios. The amateur 10-meter band uses frequencies that are very close to the channels set aside for use in the CB service.
Some of the transceivers that manufacturers call "10-meter" radios either operate on CB frequencies as manufactured and imported or are designed such that internal circuits can readily be activated by a user, a service technician or a dealer to operate on CB frequencies.
According to Section 95.603(c) of the Commission's rules, a CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service. 47C.F.R. ï¿½ 95.603(c).
The Commission's equipment authorization experts in the FCC Laboratory have determined that the transceivers listed herein and other similar models at issue here are intended for use on the CB frequencies as well as those in the amateur service because they have built-in capability to operate on CB frequencies. This capability can be readily activated by moving or removing a jumper plug, cutting or splicing a wire, plugging in a connector, or other simple means.

Thus, all the transceivers listed herein and similar models fall within the definition of a CB transmitter. See 47C.F.R. ï¿½ 95.603(c). A CB transmitter must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation. 47 C.F.R. ï¿½ï¿½ 95.603(c); 2.803.

Moreover, the dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certified under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) states: "ï¿½.([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services ï¿½ will not be certificated.)" See also Amendment of Part 95, Subpart E, Technical Regulations in the Personal Radio Services Rules, FCC 88-256, 1888 WL 488084 (August 17, 1988). This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id, and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

In addition, the Commission's equipment authorization experts have determined that these devices violate or appear to violate a number of the rules governing CB devices. For example, they may use emission types not permitted, or emit RF power at a level in excess of the levels permitted in the CB radio service. See 47 C.F.R. ï¿½ 95.639.

In view of the foregoing, the following "10-meter" transceivers are not acceptable for importation or marketing into/within the United States. Importation and marketing of these units is illegal pursuant to Section 302(b) of the Communications Act and Section 2.803 of the rules. Willful violations of the Rules and the Act may subject the violator to a monetary forfeiture of not more than $11,000 for each violation or each day of a continuing violation. The Commission continues to review this type of equipment, and additional makes and models may be added to this list in the future.

CITATION

Released: February 20, 2004

By the Enforcement Bureau, Detroit Office:

This is an official Citation issued pursuant to Section 503(b)(5) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended ("Act"), to Palco Electronics, Inc.
("Palco") for violation of Section 302(b) of the Act, and Section
2.803(a)(1) of the Commission's Rules ("Rules").

On February 10, 2004, Palco offered for sale at their store located at 18676
Eureka Road, Southgate, Michigan, the following non-certified Citizens Band
("CB") transceivers:

Ranger Communications American Spirit (SS-3900 EGHPA) $199.99

Ranger RCI 2950 DX $269.99

Ranger RCI 2970 DX $399.99

Ranger RCI 6900F Turbo $454.99

Ranger RCI 2985 DX $439.99

Ranger RCI 2995 DX $589.99

According to the Commission's records, these devices have not received an FCC equipment authorization which is required for Citizens Band transmitters marketed in the United States.

3.

Section 302(b) of the Act provides "No person shall manufacture, import,
sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section." Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that ".
no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) In the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled.." Palco's offer for sale of these devices violates both sections.

Palco marketed these devices as amateur transceivers. The Commission has evaluated radiofrequency devices similar to those listed in paragraph 2 and concluded that the devices at issue are not only amateur radios but can easily be altered for use as CB devices as well. A CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service, and it must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation. The Commission has further concluded that these devices fall within the definition of a CB transmitter and therefore cannot legally be imported or marketed in the United States. See Response from the Commission's General Counsel to U.S. Customs Service dated May 17, 1999, 14
FCC Rcd 7797 (1999).

5.

Additionally, dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certificated under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states "..([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur

Radio Services..will not be certificated." See also FCC 88-256, 1988 WL488084 (August 17, 198 . This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id., and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

Furthermore, the Commission has revised Section 2.1204(a)(5) of its Rules to prohibit all marketing and/or offering for sale in the United States of such devices even when the purchaser(s) had provided assurances that the transceivers are being bought solely for export. ALL DOMESTIC MARKETING OF SUCH DEVICES VIOLATES THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, AS AMENDED, AND THE COMMISSION'S RULES.

7.

In addition to the marketing of the non-certified transceivers addressed above, Palco is hereby warned that Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.815(c) of the Rules requires FCC Type Acceptance (or Certification) of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies below 144 MHz. Furthermore, Section 2.815(b) of the Rules prohibits the marketing of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies between 24 and 35 MHz.

Subsequent violations of the Communications Act and/or the Commission's Rules may subject the violator to substantial monetary forfeitures not to exceed $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation, seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal sanctions including imprisonment.

Palco may request a personal interview at the Commission's Field Office nearest your place of business. The nearest office is the Detroit Office, 24897 Hathaway Street, Farmington Hills, Michigan 48335-1552 , which you may contact by telephone at (24 471-5661. You must schedule this interview take place within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation.

Alternatively, you may submit a written statement to the above address within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Citation. Any written statement should specify what actions have been taken to correct the violations outlined above. Please reference case number EB-04-DT-062

This Citation shall be sent First Class U.S. Mail and, Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested, to Palco Electronics, Inc., 18676 Eureka

information

As well they should. They are human, not a God... They have to (or SHOULD) operate with in the laws they are supposed to be enforcing. Some may "think" they're above that law, but any decent judge or DA will put them in their place. It would otherwise give them all a black eye. In the case of say a scanner or CB, if they're not familiar with the laws, it seems it would be better to err on the side of caution and take NO action, especially if no other crimes were being committed in the process. CL

Just for chuckles and grins ..

About 5 years ago I was involved in a dispute with a neighbor. He was having his roof repaired. The roofers were dumping shingles on my side of the fence to be cleaned up later. I told them to get their ladder, the shingles and themselves off my property. He refused. I called the cops. The police talked to the roofers and then politely told me of the difficulties with the small property lines. I simply told the officer that I didn't have to let anyone on my property except him and only if he had a warrent. Did he have a warrent?

The cop made the folks leave my property.

End of story.

No handcuffs; that stuff has to go through the courts and local courts do not (I believe, but might be wrong) have jurisdiction over federally licensed stations be they commercial or amateur.

Viet Nam Dan and Babbling Bruce got married in San Francisco last constitution because he's pissed about not getting invited to their wedding. (OK, I stole that quip from Letterman, or Leno, or whoever I

You know, this is really sad... This problem is threatening to do damage to ALL OF US - be it CBers or Hams. Some among us have chosen to call the CBers names, saying they don't belong on the airwaves, etc. Then the insults went flinging back to the Hams... THIS SUCKS.

WE ALL are going to be affected by this bull shit. Rather than continue in a name calling event, we need to be aligning our efforts to stop the bull shit from happening. Whether you're a CBer who hates hams, or a Ham who hates CBers - NOW is not the time to be fighting amongst ourselves. United we stand, Divided we fall. In this case, none of us are better than the other, we'll all pay the price. It is time we all realize that. This bickering will be useless in the end and get us all - NO WHERE.

I'm just as guilty for getting my self involved in this mess... it simply isn't worth it. I've wasted more time than I care to think about. I'd rather spend my time wisely by learning all I can of the pending issue - it's history even in other attempts and seeing what can be done about it in a logical/legal manner even if in my own behalf should I have to defend my own actions after the fact. This crap here, isn't going to solve shit.

Have a nice day.... if you want to speak against me, that is fine - you're entitled to your opinion, be it correct or not. I'm blocking any of those who were a part of the problem - in particular - Dan - and the thread itself if need be.

We agree completely on that.

BUT, no town, city or state can make their own local laws regarding CB use. The FCC ruling/regulation some years back simply allows for local police to enforce FCC rules. It did not grant local towns, etc the authority to make up their own rules. As an extreme example, a town can not ban the use of ham radio or CB from private residences just because the local residents might want that to happen.

I agree. I think, however, the problem on the part of some hams is related to illegal CB activity (i.e. high power, freebanding, etc.). Most hams I know have no problem with CB activity that stays within the allowed FCC parameters. Some of us even use CB on occasion.
I do when I get together with friends of mine in our antique car club road tours.

Agreed... and in agreement, I say it doesn't stop those who have no clue of radio or it's laws - who govern - from "trying" to stop radio in it's path. Some of those who sit on councils and so on, are like bad cops.. They get a title and automatically their head swells. They think they can act in total disregard. So they set stupid rules. Some of which they may have no way to enforce. IF those rules aren't enacted as "ordinances", they have little chance of being enforced just speaking of the local level. Federal law "usually" supercedes most any local or state law. I say usually, because I've heard from some sources that there are exceptions.

Yours is one of many I've enjoyed. While there are problems with illegal operations in both ham and cb - some of which spur a lot of the arguments herein, none of it will matter in the end, if this comes crashing down as it is expected.

It was said in here that Part 95 doesn't exist.

Part 95 as of 2002 .... at least it was still alive then. I can't see how it was erradicated. It now also includes FRS, GMRS, R/C.

Where did I say that? Please produce the post. What I said was that, as of the time I made the post, I hadn't HEARD any of the so-called "intruders" on ten meters. I've also posted that a few people (like you) are making a huge mountain out of a tiny molehill, which appears to still be the case. So please dredge up any post of mine where I said otherwise.

And what difference does it make to a no-code Tech whether there's someone intruding on 10 meters? You cannot legally use the band, so you have nothing to say about it. I suppose next you'll be taking on the international broadcasters in 40 meters? LOL!

<irrelevant drivel snipped>

Where have I ever said a Ranger was legal for use on CB? Please produce the post. I said it's a 10 (and 12) meter amateur radio. It's obvious that your reading comprehension deficit is far larger than anyone had suspected.

Allow me to point out (again) that the most commonly used "bootlegger" rigs on 11 meters are Icoms, Kenwoods, and Yaesus; not Rangers or Unidens. A point you repeatedly ignore because it doesn't fit your arroneous, preconceived notions.

No matter. The point is moot anyhow, since the radio was sold despite your attempts to stop the sale. Which shows how little everyone thinks of you and your stupidy.

You should stop using your brain for a seat-cushion. I know you like to sniff it after a long day at the keyboard but it's intended for rational thought, which is obviously completely foreign to you.

One can find extras all over the spectrum. Of course, YOU will find them operating VHF, as you are quite limited in your hammie activities, but make no mistake, they are nothing like you, Lelnad. In fact, no one wishes to be associated with you (not a single hammie),,,let alone be identified as someone like you. So no,,they are nothing like you, despite your continual seeking of approval and acceptance. You will never gain acceptance, lelnad, you're a troublemaking, namecalling, hostile, angry individual that hates himself and blame everyone else in your world for for your self-created and well deserved misery. You have a single peer and his call is N8WWM (whom you threatened to have spam the group with pornography if I didn't conform to your hilarious idea of what was appropriate in this group for discussion, hence your tag of "impotence").

Turn the page and we find, in fact, it is yourself missing out on what hammiedom has to offer, as you are unable to enjoy the privileges offered to that of one who has demonstrated more knowledge (according to the FCC) regarding hammie radio, and man, it really chaps your ass,,I mean, it's responsible for some really erratic behavior from you, Lelnad.

Threats to me, threats to the group,,,,lol,,no,,you are nothing like any extra I have ever come across, and that includes years prior to you attaining your entry-level cb plus ticket when you were still sucking cb banter and thinking you knew something...heheh! There is a reason there are limits where you can go and what you can do,,,,,and that reason is, you're not educated in the communications field to the point the FCC requires satisfactory of your knowledge. If you were, you would have been able to master the code instead of devoting your life to bitching about code and those above your license status. You have always been an angry, vengeful, lying, mean and spiteful individual,,,to any who express an idea you can't comprehend or doesn't conform to your twisted, radical, uneducated, unenlightened, ignorant, minority view of the world.
those you feel are mere cbers and also to those that enjoy cw.

In fact, you're just ticked 'cause you said you were going to upgrade and found yourself incapable of learning code, much in the same manner you claimed you were getting a Masters degree from "collage" (sic") 3 and a half years ago.

>One of the truly great things about this hobby

HF contact)

HAhahahahhahhaha..lmao..easy for an extra to say,,,,hahaha,,the funny part is, you believe it to be true of a nocode license....hahahahha..nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, in context, the dude probably claimed such prior to the nocode token introductory license for those incapable of furthering their education concerning hammie radio...hahhaha,,
You should really stop looking to others for words of wisdom, Lelnad....people have been setting you up since you were outed as a uneduated lying lid on this group and others..You're all about poor information, bad advice, ignorance, hostility, lies, malice, and threats. A real loser you are.

Which is why it's called faith. I find it no coincidence those who share such faith appear to be more settled and secure individuals, at peace with themselves and others, compared to the those who discount the well what else are they lelnad? they surely arent ham bands.

>I.E. Bootlegging. And Tim they are not priate

i'd say the general population doesnt even know what ham radio is and your just pissed because when you walk around with your ht on your belt and your funny antennas on your van that nearly every person that ask why you have all that wierd shit automatically assumes your a cb'er. why you hate cb'ers has little to do with you being blamed for them causing interference its more that you hate being mistaken for one by everybody in town who see's how stupid you look and ask why you do look like that. its your feeling to be more important than cb'ers because you have a ham ticket and the inability of anybody else to see that self imposed importance that has you pissed. if you didnt feel you were so much better than cb'ers you wouldnt be so insulted every time somebody mistakes you for one.

no i mean i'm having fun working the entire world daily on otherwise unused frequencies. and your still pissed because your stuck working the world on the internet and thru repeaters. and btw a fancy repeater like ecolink is still just another repeater. if the system fails your comms are useless.

Steve, Twirt doesn't scare anybody off, but his body odor sure does. Nothing like seeing him in the mind's eye do a swan dive in to the imploded remains of his septic tank, thinking its his new in ground pool, while wearing a 'jockstrap' he mistakenly thinks is the same as the male equivalent of a thong bikini brief. Remember Twirt to keep your mouth closed, that way you don't have to eat any crap, and nobody has to put up with any of yours that spews forth from your pie-hole when its opened.

This incident occured years befor HR2346 (or whatever number that was). And nuisance laws vary depending on your locality, as well as their method of enforcement.

>Actual Amateur Radio licensees are exemp because why???? Because we hold

Hams regs do not exempt a ham from local nuisance laws. You can be in 100% compliance with federal law, but you can still be violating local laws if you are creating or causing a nuisance with your station. Your FCC license is not a 'get-out-of-jail-free' card.

>Don't believe it CJ? Check it out.

I'm not CJ, but what should I 'check out'?

The local police are ONLY enabled to inforce the FCC laws. That does NOT include shuting down a legal CB station just because it might cause interference.

Additionally, local nuisance laws are NOT applicable to authorized radio transmissions per applicable FCC rules.

It is against any effort to enforce a nuisance law against a legally operated ham (or CB) station. If you think otherwise, please provide applicable case law. From being a ham for 40+ years I have never heard of a single successful case of local nuisance laws being used against a ham station.

Lie. I haven't defended anything or anybody. I question your actions and your motives, along with your extremely selective attempts at being a FCC agent and internet cop. You are a pathetic, sick little man, DouGay; no wonder your Mommy died of embarassment!

As usual, you ignore facts and legitimate questions because they don't fit your illogical preconceived notions.

If you bother to read the FCC stuff you have been spamming the newsgroup with, you'd see that amateur transceivers do not require FCC type acceptance before being imported. The Ranger is imported as an amateur radio: It's a 10 meter (and 12 meter, if modified) rig and it's perfectly legal for such use. I have never said (nor has Twist that I've found) that it's legal for use on CB.

It's only you that can't figure it out.

Which makes you the village idiot, doesn't it DouGay? And you're real proud of yourself, too. But don't worry, we humor idiots here. Sometimes.

For one thing, it was WA3MOJ who had to hide behind a french remailer.
For another thing, check the sentence fragment "You ask w" that has been appearing in all of his posts lately. You really are a nitwit, aren't you?

But why does it matter to you, unless you feel that you aren't getting the attention you think you deserve for posting it?

It doesn't take any medical diploma to know that your primary disability is the inability to distinguish the difference between "your" and "you're" when writing a sentence. That's hardly an excuse for ripping off the taxpayers.

nocode or code. it doesn't matter.
most engineers over the last 20 years haven't even bothered with Morse.
besides, what does Morse have to do with designing micro-electronic circuits anyway?

How about new methods of transmitting voice or data?

I bothered to actually learn code when I was 15, in the boy scouts and trying to get a merit badge for electronics. if I had bothered to continue with it at that time, I'd be a full fledged extra now. However, that was not exactly relivant to other things going on and I promptly forgot most fo what I learned when it came to CW.

However, your tirades against those who don't know, don't want to know or can't learn (for whatever reason) is, to say the least, unreasonable. you have no concrete facts to back you up. all you have are emotions based on fear, uncertainty and doubt (FUD).

Why don't you break down, learn some things and then come back here with an "informed" opinion?

-Most- engineers don't design micro-electronic circuits at all. They are too busy filling out paperwork, arguing with accountants, and trying to figure out which one of those micro-electronic circuits is responsible for the latest major malfunction.

>How about new methods of transmitting voice or data?

License or no license, it doesn't matter because the cutting-edge in new and innovative modes of radio communication are being developed by experimenters, both licensed and unlicensed, on longwave and below. Here's a good place to learn more: http://www.lwca.org/

>I bothered to actually learn code when I was 15, in the boy scouts and

I know that 5 wpm was required for the Radio merit badge, but when did they start requiring Morse for the Electronics merit badge?

I think you will agree that learning code is easy. The hard part is mustering up enough discipline and willingness to learn it. For some people that's as hard as keeping a New-Year's resolution. I can respect that. What I -don't- respect are all the lame excuses people use for not learning it when a simple "because I don't want to learn it" would suffice.

As much as this pains me to say, Twithead is right -- about the only defenders of the no-code ticket are no-codes, and always with excuses like "No-codes have made great contributions to ham radio". I have yet to read, from any no-code in here, anything along the lines of "I just haven't buckled down to learn Morse so I can upgrade my license", or "I lost interest in ham radio after I got my ticket", both of which I think are closer to the truth with a lot, if not most, of these no-codes. Same with a lot of CBers and freebanders. There are some like me that don't want a ham license at all, but you don't hear me defending the no-codes -- on the contrary, I encourage radio enthusiasts of all kinds to learn Morse -even if- they don't want to get or upgrade their license. Call it a ritual, downward compatibility, or just plain "radio-ish", Morse code is a good and easy skill to learn for anyone in the hobby (or profession) of communications, whether it is in radio or some other field of communication (don't forget that a radio is not required to communicate via Morse code). So even if you never intend to use it, it's still there if you ever need it -- if you were really a Boy Scout you should remember their motto......

The sad part of all this is that even the dope-smoking, gangster/pimp-wannabe amp-junkie Tim Nebout knows code, yet sharp and intelligent no-codes only make excuses.

No,,the only "true ignorant fools are those who enter a discussion or respond to a post, and begin such with an insult or ad hominem.
When youare capable of learning the art of proper communication, try again and come on back.
Again, it never ceases to amaze me that I find in one place, so many licensed in communication suffering from severe commnication deficits.
That a licensed hammie has the need to open a discussion or enter a thread with ignorance arrived via insult, such truly illustrates the hammies lack of communication skill. IE: Beginning a communication exchange with insult is not effective or conducive communication,,,and you have demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt on several occasions, along with the likes of the other problem posters (read: nocodes like n8wwm and kc8ldo, operators that have been busted by the FCC, threatened and harassed many members of this group, and/or have failed their code test). Once again, when you leanr proper technique in communication, come on back and try again. Until then, I suggest you re-evaluate what constitutes effective and proper communicative techniques.

the difference between intelligence and stupidity is that intelligence

"...sharp and intelligent no-codes" is somewhat of an oxymoron in rec.radio.cb. No doubt, there are many that rise above what is required of them,,,but they do not hail from IIlinois, Toledo, or Michigan. Not being able to learn code is understandable, as some showed dyslexia can severely impact the acquisition of such a skill. Wanting to do away with it for refusal to learn a new skill is self-destructive, as one is purposely limiting their education of what radio has to offer.

You're better off having a good dive shop check them out first, for internal rust, etc. They probably need both a Visual Inspection ("VIP") has well as a new Hydrostatic ("Hydro") certification. The former runs around $5, the latter closer to $25.

> What is the max pressure rating for these tanks?

If they're as old as you're making them sound, 2200psi. There should be stampings on the tank's neck area that will tell you the manufacturer, the material, the pressure rating, etc...again, a good dive shop can decipher these for you. If there's a "plus" rating, its expired by now.

Good luck & be careful,

View: Complete Thread (5 articles)

To Whom It May Concern:

As far as we know Leland Scott has done nothing except to occasionally speak out in disapproval of illegal CB operation in this public forum. He is not now, and has not ever partipated in organized Anti-KeyClown actions.

To the best of our knowledge, he has posted nothing under any screen name except his own. We who opose Twistedhed respect Leland for his views and wish to go on record as stating that he has no ties to us or any other AntiKeyclown personnel. We are soley responsible for all tweaking, baiting, and embarassing of Twistedhed.

Mr. Twistedhed has, as usual, succumbed to his own half-baked and deluded theories about who is doing what to whom. He has barked up many trees, all of them wrong. It has been a pitiable, laughable spectacle, and one that we have enjoyed immensely.

But the time has come for Twisted to apologize to Leland Scott. Following this, he must spare himself further shame and embarassment and leave this newsgroup for good.

Sincerely,
Anti-Twistedhed Group

I don't shop at truckstops. Why would I when amateur stores sell better radios? And they're much easier to modify: Clip one wire or a diode and you have DC to light coverage! You're really missing the boat here, DouGay Adair.

So you're claiming that you've found a way to cut off the import of Icoms, Kenwoods, and Yaesu radios? LOL! Dream on, loser.

What a maroon you are, DouGay. You always were and you always will be the village idiot! Thanks for the comic relief.

Have to wonder why even Georgie-girl doesn't chime in with you anymore, though. You two fags have a spat?

GW, I'm simply passing along info that I got from a certain phone call. Nothing more or less. If you are not guilty of anything, don't sweat it. If you are, then maybe you should retain legal counsel. I suspect it would be a good time for you to distance yourself from the group you have adopted.

hmmmmmm, is that what they do at places like Digital, Motorola, and Intel?
if that were truely the case, we wouldn't be using any more than 386's right now.

my bad. I had to look it up and yes, it was the radio merit badge. I was taking the electronics one concurrent and had the same MB counsellor. so things got solved in 2 birds with one stone way.

thanks for the correction.

true enough... However, there are instances where that reason is not sufficient. I know of 3 people who have disabilities that would preclude them from ever learning the code, period. Nothing they can do about it, but everytime they comment on the debate, they get flamed, accused of being lazy, etc. My take on it is to have Code as an endorsement (not required, but handy to have in case) like it is with the commercial grade licenses.

not entirely. I know of at least 15 advanced and extra class hams here in phoenix that would disagree with Twistedhead. They are of the opinion that CW is an outdated, outmoded means of communication and would much preferr it be dropped as soon as possible. They are of the opinion that with 2 dozen available DIGITAL modes that can pierce noise a lot better than the human ear, that CW is a dead subject. Mind you, some of these folks are at least a decade older than me (though a fair number of the younger set are in their mid twenties).

as for losing interest, NAY! I haven't lost interest. I just don't have the time I used to have to dedicate to it. sure, some have, but others have becomes religated to "appliance users" because the kit building aspect has gone away (remember HeathKit?).

not all of them. some just don't talk. and others (like me) don't feel the need to continue to endorse an outmoded means of communication as a REQUIREMENT of being licensed.

now, if it came down to the arguement that most of the modern technology was inoperative and all you had was a simple receiver and a CW kit, then yeah, I'd have it up to speed in no time. but that just isn't the case and probably won't be for some time (if ever).

I'm an engineer and I don't work at Digital, Motorola or Intel. I used to work at HP, then at JM (before it was taken over by Honeywell), but I wasn't making chips. I know quite a few engineers through our Local and none of them make chips. There are a -=LOT=- of career fields for EE's besides making chips, Eric.

I have already found that to be the case, but -you- might find that they are not all hams. You might also find that -very few- of them are no-code hams. It works two ways here -- hams cannot claim exclusivity for developing new methods of communication, and neither does having a license automatically give you the right to make such a claim. Nobody is disputing the fact that many hams -have-made significant contributions to modern communication, but so have many -unlicensed- individuals. The license has absolutely nothing to do with it.

The reason they get flamed is because most people, myself included, have never heard of any kind of learning disability that would prevent someone from learning code (and still have the ability to operate a radio). Not even lysdexia. Code is just another language. I have difficulty learning other languages, but I have learned a little French and Spanish over the years, and I have also learned ASL and Morse code. Of all these languages, Morse is by far the simplest to use.

Perhaps you can ask them what disability they have, then post it on the group so myself and others can learn about it. Because, in all seriousness, it sounds like a lame excuse concocted by the 'instant satisfaction' crowd -- those who prefer to buy something rather than learn something, or build something, or... well, you get the idea.

Then tell them that -they- are outdated and outmoded, and that -they- should be dropped as soon as possible. Or tell them that speech is an outdated and outmoded means of communication. So is mail. And newspapers. And magazines. And telephone. And, for that fact, paper and pencil. By their reasoning, we should do away with ALL of those things. They are wrong. Just because something is old and there are better things does -NOT- mean that it has outlived it's usefulness or it's reliability. That is, unless the thing that is old is attempting to tell others that the wheel is obsolete.

>as for losing interest, NAY! I haven't lost interest. I just don't have

Far from it. There are more kits on the market than ever before. This is a great era for the kit-builder because there is so much diversity in the kits that are available compared to many years ago when there were just a few kit companies in existence. Not only that, there are more circuits on the net than you could probably find at most public libraries, and even -there- you can probably find thousands of different circuits to build, and hundreds of different ways to build them. In the early days of Heathkit everything was point-to-point wiring. Nowdays you can assemble a circuit using P2P, wirewrap, proto-board....etc. You can etch your own PC board if you want. You can even assemble and run a virtual circuit on your PC before you build it! The time spent building, experimenting, smoking resistors, burning yourself with the soldering iron.... that's all part of the hobby, for cryin' out loud! That's why they have electronics questions on the test! The "appliance operators" have a very limited view of ham radio. They are part of the 'instant satisfaction' crowd -- they just want to get on the air and run their mouths, and have little interest in the hobby beyond making sure that everyone else can hear their voice (regardless of whether anyone wants to hear it or not). IMO, if they have time to talk, they have time to learn code. So until code is no longer a requirement, "no time" is no excuse.

Nor do I. However, one thing is certain: anyone that is willing to learn the code will also have a sincere interest in ham radio for the purpose it was intended -- a hobby where people can learn, use and share different aspects of radio and electronics. And Morse code is one aspect of radio that is almost universal, like it or not.

If you can "have it up to speed in no time", what happens to your 'reason' that you "just don't have the time" to dedicate to the hobby? It's an excuse, Eric. If you want your opinion to really matter then take the time, learn the code, upgrade your license, and -then- come back here as a person who can see the issue from both sides and tell us why code should be eliminated. Otherwise, it just sounds like you are making excuses.

"...sharp and intelligent no-codes" is somewhat of an oxymoron in rec.radio.cb. No doubt, there are many that rise above what is required of them,,,but they do not hail from IIlinois, Toledo, or Michigan. Not being able to learn code is understandable, as some have claimed dyslexia can severely impact the acquisition of such a skill. Wanting to do away with it for refusal to learn a new skill is self-destructive, as one is purposely limiting their education of what radio has to offer.

Gee,,,thanks,,I think,,,,Twistedhed is down time,,,,some folks play sports, some folks do drugs, some folks drink liquor, some folks go bowling....I do Twistedhed,,....and judging by the others that "do" Twistedhed also, and induce "Twisted-mania", I'd say "Twistedhed" is quite an effective time waster.
Concerning the code..I agree, it makes no difference by virtue of licensure or not,,but no mistake, nothing is more effective or recognized as pounding out the universal SOS in times of need.....in an email a few years ago with a reg on this group, we discussed the manner in which we were actually introduced to code. As a kid in the scouts, we learned SOS, then our names and pack number. Another scout who was obsessed with Indian culture and was learning Indian smoke signals had two small drums. Before we knew it, we were holding full conversations in front of adults and other pack members who had no clue what in the hell we were doing. You can only imagine what two kids would have to say to each other in front of a room full of adults when they were "certain" no one else was able to know what they were saying, except for maybe a scoutmaster or two. To the uninitiated, we were just a few kids making noise on a couple of hand toms.

739. Need help with extra channels in TRC-458 (858PLL)

I have a TRC-458 (Has the 858 PLL). I need to replace the switches for the extra channels. The mod that I found says to use two switches - one SPST and one SPDT center off. The switches that are currently in the radio (and are broken) are DPDT switches. The one in the S1 position only has two wires hooked up to it. The S2 has three wires. The wires are soldered across both rows on each switch.

My question is this - should I replace the switches with what the mod says or use the same switches as what's in there? I'm assuming that the person that did the mod may not have had the right switches, so he just used DPDT switches instead. The previous owner of the radio said that the buttons on front, for the NB, etc... are also used with the extra channels, but the mod I found makes no mention of extra channels with these buttons.

Any ideas?

true enough, but I was spoeaking of one speciality in particular.
in the broader sense of being an engineer, there are a lot of things going on. I know that technical writing is a must (mostly for the design reports and proposals for new designs, etc). Perhaps I should have classified it as "Design Engineer". ah well. :)

Thats true as well. thanks for adding that in. But, the whole point of this go-around I think was the code/no code debate (and its irrelivance to many things).

I can name several off the top of my head.
Dysnomia (a memory related disability), Auditory Dyslexia, Visual Dyslexia (this one has less of an effect except where putting together word in printed form context). Deafness (profound and total). There are many more.
I have named the top 3 (or 4).. BTW, I suffer both from blindness and dyslexia (the latter I have had all my life and the former is a recent (14 years) onset). The dyslexia makes it a lot harder when learning alternative forms of written communication (I.E. Braille).

You can google the medical databases for some of the disabilities that may preclude learning code (auditory and memory related). Thats about all I can offer at this juncture.

you may also notice, I use a spell checker (and sometimes, it doesn't quite get everything). The big problem is, there are those on here (and in the world in general) that do not care if you are disabled, etc. to them, you either learn the code or you don't get the ticket. That kind of arrogance we, as a community, can do without.

it sounds lame, but it isn't. I mentioned them above, but I will post here again: Auditory dyslecia, visual dyslexia, dysnomia, deafness, etc. there are others, but I haven't had time to go and look them up (I am typing this in between being at home and heading out to get some work done on a computer)..

ah, but now you are comparing apples and oranges. the wheel cannot be compared to code. its a natural form and its function predates even the human race. CW, on the other hand, is less than 200 years old. We have far better means of communication (digital modes that can be heard even through the heaviest of static). Try listening to a CW pileup on 80 sometime in the middle of a thunderstorm, AT NIGHT. Its just not possible for a human to pick anything out of that mess without a lot of help. Now, to have one who is disabled in such a way as to not be able to learn the code, this would be in impossible task.

heh. "no time" is no excuse, huh? I think you will learn that sometimes, having no time isn't even an excuse, its a neccessity! as for the kit building thing, yeah, there are a lot of other oissibilities, but nothing "officially" sponsored (like heathkit was). Sure, Jameco is probably a good alternative, but they don't carry much for the radio entusiast. Now, admittedly, building "on your own" is appealing, but then, the tedium of finding the right parts and purchasing for cheap can cause many to simply cease the effort altogether. Its more or less the price we pay for all the "modern conveniences" of an integrated chip market.

Fine by me, if they want to learn it, then let them. but it doesn't have to be a REQUIREMENT. all that will do is prevent many good radio operators for taking the steps to getting on HF or some of the other bands where general or above are required.

as I said, "I would have it up to speed in no time". I did not imply this statement for anyone else. the other reasons still stand of their own merit. Please do not try to make one small part of an overall arguement inclusive to all. it just won't work.

it doesn't matter that you don't have a license. you are still compliant with part 95 (and thus, deserving of any protections therein). the Utility company there must adhere to part 15 (as their devices fall under those regulations) and they have NO RIGHTS to deny you your services because of that.

instead of spending money to defend yourself, get hold of someone in the local ham radio clubs (sure, you may not be a ham, but someone there should be able to help in any case). in fact, go out, take your tech no-code test, get a license for part 97 spectrum and then tell the utilitiy company to go pound sand (if they choose to sue you at that point, they will lose and all it will cost you is a little time, $10-$15 for the license fee and perhaps the book "now your talking"). Believe me, you go this way and they'll have no choice but to lay off.

We haven't had anything like this in Arizona yet. We (as hams) work fairly closely with the local utilities and, frankly, they look at BPL as a dead end technology out here.

On a last note, don't take your station down. You use it to talk to friends and in times of disaster, it can be pressed into service to pass helth and welfare traffic (emergency services duty). there are a fair number of groups nationwide that do this on CB (REACT). We even have on here in Phoenix. A lot of times, hams will appreciate ANY assistance they can get to pass the traffic along (even if its on an unlicensed spectrum such as 11 meter). I am one such, having come up to ham from CB in 1992. I got out of CB though for other reasons (trash mouths, stalking and the other bullshit nonsense that went on). If I had the equipment here, I'd probably do a lot more listening than transmitting.

BTW, I voluteer time with the red cross, the Maricopa County Emergency Services group and a few others. I am fairly busy during large chunks of the year doing public service duty. I live in a place that has an HA (and they have told me to take down my antennas on more than one occasion only to be told to pound sand as their bylaws don't prohibit such antennas and nearly everyone here has an antenna of some kind on their roofs in full view of the public areas). That HA has since gone out of business here (4 years ago) and I have gotten no complaints from the neighbors at all (in fact, a few of them became hams and at least one is still on CB, but with some help, has cleaned up his station to the point where I can't even hear him on 10 meters anymore).

Point is, you don't have to lose your station because some utility company says you do. until they actually subpeona you into court, all their threat are: HOT AIR!

"...sharp and intelligent no-codes" is somewhat of an oxymoron in rec.radio.cb. No doubt, there are many that rise above what is required of them,,,but they do not hail from IIlinois, Toledo, or Michigan. Not being able to learn code is understandable, as some have claimed dyslexia can severely impact the acquisition of such a skill. Wanting to do away with it for refusal to learn a new skill is self-destructive, as one is purposely limiting their education of what radio has to offer.

>I even think that -you- are "sharp and

Gee,,,thanks,,I think,,,,Twistedhed is down time,,,,some folks play sports, some folks do drugs, some folks drink liquor, some folks go bowling....I do Twistedhed,,....and judging by the others that "do" Twistedhed also, and induce "Twisted-mania", I'd say "Twistedhed" is quite an effective time waster.
Concerning the code..I agree, it makes no difference by virtue of licensure or not,,but no mistake, nothing is more effective or recognized as pounding out the universal SOS in times of need.....in an email a few years ago with a reg on this group, we discussed the manner in which we were actually introduced to code. As a kid in the scouts, we learned SOS, then our names and pack number. Another scout who was obsessed with Indian culture and was learning Indian smoke signals had two small drums. Before we knew it, we were holding full conversations in front of adults and other pack members who had no clue what in the hell we were doing. You can only imagine what two kids would have to say to each other in front of a room full of adults when they were "certain" no one else was able to know what they were saying, except for maybe a scoutmaster or two. To the uninitiated, we were just a few kids making noise on a couple of hand toms.

Uh oh, a truce maybe?

Quick story: After I got out of the Marines I goofed off for a couple years then entered college. I had a much more difficult time studying than I did in High-School just a few years earlier, and they tested me 'positive' for dyslexia. BFD. You know what I did to get through Macro- and Microeconomics? I read the book upside down! That little trick made me concentrate harder on what I was reading, and worked just fine until I learned easier ways to overcome the problem. In other words, I really don't see it as a problem as much as a challenge. Some things come easy for some people -- the rest of us have to work for it!

> Deafness (profound and total).

You can build a tone detector that will key a light bulb or LED. I know one ham here in Spokane that is 100% deaf and does exactly that. In fact, I built the device for her. It's just a few components around a 567 tone detector chip that used to be available at Radio Shaft. Later she built her own using a 4046 PLL that tracks the signal if it drifts.

Ever try reading Braille upside down? Might work, might not, but what could it hurt to try?

To think of your problems as disabilities is an "I can't" attitude -- very negative. You just have to figure out how to do things a different way, or use extra tools, or whatever it takes to do what you want to do.

You are only disabled in your mind. To overcome a learning 'disorder' you have to change the way your brain learns stuff. It's not as difficult as you might think, assuming you haven't quit trying.

Speaking of lame, every year Spokane hosts the Bloomsday run, one of the largest in the country. If you could watch that race you would see many people that you might say are 'disabled', but none of them would say the same. There are usually a few participants that run the race with a prosthetic leg, and at least one that I know of who has run it with TWO of them! Hell, I'm so out of shape these days that I would struggle to just WALK the course, yet I have both my original legs -- shame on me!

I think it is -you- that is comparing apples and oranges. It's like saying that the family sedan is obsolete because there are Hummers that can climb cliffs and ford oceans. Well, most people don't spend most of their time 4-wheeling the extreme, and most hams don't push the envelope of noise adversity.

You really need to catch up on the kit scene. Give me a couple days and I'll post a list of links to radio kits that are available. And I really don't know what you mean by Heathkit being "'officially' sponsored" -- they were a company that made kits, just like the name implies. How will it prevent "many" good radio operators from getting on HF? I doubt that's the case, and I doubt that has been the case since the requirement was first introduced. But then maybe that's the way it should be. You'll never know one way or the other until you are there.

Well, in one statement you speak for yourself, but in another you speak on behalf of others as if they are in the same boat with you. Which is it?

A truce? Only now, after both you and Twistednuts, be you seperate morons or only one idiot with two clown faces, have demonstrated your ignorance not once, not twice, but literally hundreds of times.... after years of whining about others doing the very same things you do yourself.... after verbally attacking myself (and others) based solely on my legal position.... after getting spanked by your own ISP for forging posts.... you want a TRUCE?

No, I think an unconditional surrender would be more appropriate.

Yes, but you may need a second battery in parallel to handle the amperage draw.
Most people just use a sealed cell in the vehicle or mount a second battery under the hood. 2-2290's driving 4-2879's good for 800 easy. Just be sure to have excellent grounds.......look out...more hetrodyne on the way!

yes it can, in fact. The one person I know personally that suffers from Dysnomia had to put a reminder not on his radio (what his callsign was and when to ID). it took about 6 months before it became a matter of habit.

However, he doesn't have a KW amp (runs pretty much a barefoot rig with a small number of knobs). simple things are definitely easier to deal with.
Incidently, said individual is a ham. took 3 tries before he got his ticket too.

I did much the same in highschool. used to cheese off the teachers something fierce. They didn't like it when I wrote backwards too (most times I did so deliberately when I was pissed off. told them if they didn't like it, get a mirror!). Turns out though, I made for a natural cryptographer. I'd write in my wierd coded ways and no one could decipher it (not without taking a lot of time and some word analysis). :)

yes, sometimes though, a tone to light device would sound false positivies if the static was rough. Such a device is never very simple. However, thinking about it, a small pll, a j/k switch and a few other items would get around most of the noise issues. :)

did. problem is, with a 6 dot cell, its too easy to confuse characters.
now a form of braille called moon is loads easier (once you get past how the shapes are related). its a symbolic version of braille. Never tried to learn that. I may only be partial (less than 1% from total these days), but I still use what I can.

I wouldn't go to that extreme. I am a bit more relaistic about things.
there are just some things (like driving a car or truck or other motorized conveyance) that I cannot do for reasons of safety. There are some things that would take me 4-6 times longer just to learn and then there are some things I can do quite easily (such as crunching numbers and solving complex math forms in my head). I just never bothered to relearn the code (personally), but I do recognize that for some, learning the code is either not possible or extremely impractical given the circumstances.

I haven't quit trying, However, the elasticity of the brain only goes so far, for a teenager, this would be easy. I am near 40 now and its a lot harder. I've gotten to the point where trying to learn new stuff that I may end up not using just isn't worth it.

That may be. I haven't built a kit in years (not sure that I can without burning my fingers yet again with a soldering iron).

The thing with extra channel modifications are that each "tech" has their own "style" WRT how the mod is implemented. I could not even begin to fathom what the thought process was when the original mod was made.

The only thing I can tell you is that the upd-858 PLL uses a BCD (Binary coded decimal) encoder for the /N counter. The pins that are of the most interest to channel expanders is 22, 21, 20, 19 and 13 (for the gap channels). In order to understand the relationship of how each pin relates to frequency selection, it becomes helpful to create a truth chart for the known frequencies. From there it become easy to extrapolate additional frequencies.

This PLL is capable of synthesizing 399 individual "channels".
However, the radios bandwidth limits practical range to around 200 channels. A stock radio, with the factory crystals will start at 26.065, and end at 30.055 Mhz. The VCO can be tuned to any 2 Mhz segment within that range.

IMHO, this Uniden 858 chassis has been my all time favorite CB chassis. There were a lot of interesting modifications that could be done, and it performed well too.

You appear to be barking up the wrong tree. Concerning this forum, I have yet to see one set forth such nonsense. Can you be more specific, since you present it as such a "big" problem? How about a single example?

(Perhaps you can ask them what disability they have, then post it on the group so myself and others can learn about it. Because, in all seriousness, it sounds like a lame excuse concocted by the 'instant satisfaction' crowd -- those who prefer to buy something rather than learn something, or build something, or... well, you get the idea.)

You already admitted you can be "up to speed" in no time concerning code, so pardon my curiosity while you look to set forth disabilities as a preclusion to your ability to master it.

Are you talking about Texas Terry Bull, the wrestler?

Or the Terry Bull that used to post to rec.radio.scanner?

Or the Terry Bull that use to post under the names:
Ben Dover or I. P. Dailey?

Terry Bull was the registered "owner" of webhideout.com, which has for some reason now expired.

Try asking someone in the general public under 30 that. they'll go "HUH?".

I didn't say voice. how about broad spectrum digital and a few of the other digital modes? if voice can't get through then CW is going to be very hard pressed and the only things I've seen work reliably of late are computer enhanced emission types.

ok, name me a BIG NAME kit dealer other than Heathkit? Jameco doesn't count and neither does the scientific american catalog of science projects. When I mean big name, I mean MULTINATIONAL.

as for my ability to use or relearn code, thats not really the point of this debate. the point is: its relivance with current technologies and use.

Right. And the movie "Titanic" was a flop.

Oh hardly! What bands you -you- listen to? I forgot, you are deaf. Well, let me give you a hint here -- CW cuts through noise like nothing else because of the very narrow bandwidth (no sidebands!). Most CW filters have a bandwidth of 500Hz or less, and some are smaller than 30Hz, neither of which are wide enough to carry intelligible voice in any mode, including digital. Watt for watt, CW has an effective range that FAR exceeds any other mode of communication, and for weak-signal work (pulling signals from 20dB below the noise floor) is best done with slow-CW, also known as QRSS (which, btw, was developed by LOWFERs, both licensed and unlicensed). In other words, Morse code is not nearly as obsolete as you think it is.

Ramsey comes to mind almost immediately. Most of the major parts retailers (like Digi-Key, Dalbani, Mouser, etc.) have several pages of kits in their catalogs. Here's a link to help you find more: http://www.extremezone.com/~nk7m/parts.htm

Your ability to use code is most definately relevant since you don't have enough experience with it to know that it is a far superior mode of communication than almost any other mode when it comes to simplicity, reliability, universal recognition, effective range, and cutting through the QRM. You are making opinions about something you don't fully understand. The fact is that current technology hasn't made CW obsolete -- on the contrary, current technology is trying desperately to catch up! Kind of like antennas.... You can shop for months looking for a better mobile antenna than the cheap-and-easy 9' whip, but even current technology is hard-pressed to find anything better.

Like I said before, you are trying to discard the wheel just because it's old.

Morse code can become "habit", too. Just like any other language. What's the problem?

I've heard just about all the excuses I can handle. If you don't want to learn the code, don't. People like yourself are probably the reason CW should remain a requirement for HF.

Dammit Geo! Stop accusing him of doing that. I told you I forged WA3MOJ.
Please try to keep things straight.

Eric is one of those people who uses his "disability" as an excuse for all his problems in life.

In previous postings, he has cited his "disability" as a legitimate reason for sitting at home and collecting government assistance (i.e. WELFARE) instead of holding a job and working for a living. (Funny how his eyesight is supposively too poor to allow him to obtain employment and yet he has no problem reading and writing to Internet newsgroups.)

Now, Eric suggests his "disability" should give him special privileges in obtaining an upgrade of his amateur radio license (i.e. allowing him to bypass the Morse test.)

Poor little Eric Oyen. He has a "disability", so the world owes him a lifetime of handouts and special privileges. Frankly, people with this kind of attitude make me sick. I'd imagine there are several others on this forum who share my opinion.

Thats true, in one of his posts he said "the nose knows". Didn't know at the time what he meant by that.

Some people need welfare, and that's fine with me. Other people are too lazy to get a job. Those are people that I wouldn't want to work for me, with me, or in any position that would make them more of a burden to society than an asset. Would you want a lazy slacker driving a school bus? Or cooking your dinner? Not me. Just pay them off and tell them to stay out of the way.

>Now, Eric suggests his "disability" should give him special privileges in >obtaining an upgrade of his amateur radio license (i.e. allowing him to bypass >the Morse test.)

As for Eric, I have no idea if he gets welfare or not, and if he does whether it is justified. Even if he does and it -is- justified, that's no excuse for using a disability to gain privileges that other people must earn, especially when other people with disabilities -do- earn them.

Everyone has challenges to face, whether they are physical, mental or psychological. Most people accept those challenges. Others use them as an excuse not to try.

He's an ambitious low level toadie trying to score points with his idols. It's kind of a homage to his new akc heros and their

Not exactly, but I do own lots of radios. I have talked on a CB radio in the past. Is that good enough? Do you own a CB?

Any idiot can sign up. Just go to Google, type the word "translate", and then cut and paste the text from viola in the text box. Works in reverse too. Geo thinks he's cool from time to time by posting in french (non-caps intentional, due to the wussy nature of the french). Remember WWII? Then, of course, comes the wimpy response from them in Iraq. We should have given them to the Russian's after WWII. Bunch of losers!!!!!!!!!

This list is by no means comprehensive. Some are manufacturers and some are retailers. The companies marked with an asterik (*) sell products that could get you into big trouble with the FCC: i.e, broadcast transmitters with too much power and/or CB 'linear' amps.

I replaced the broken switches with the SPST and SPDT switches as the mod says, and I only get the standard 40 channels. With the switches in the other positions, I don't get the standard channels according to the mod commonly found on the net. I'll replace them with the same switches that were in there (apparently two DPDT switches) and see what happens. Once that's done, I'll have to tackle the problem of why there's no audio with two different mic's. I'd still like to know what mod the tech went by, as is appears pushing some of the front buttons affect the frequency, but I suppose that might be an after effect of not having the right switches.

Once the switches are replaced and I have the results, I'll post it here for information.

Same here. I spent three days in Paris & two days in the Champagne district. Once you got outside of the metro area's the people were usually very pleasant to talk with.
Of England, France, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, Germany & Netherlands the Swiss were the rudest.

it is when you can do the same thing with multiple filters on multiple frequenciies less than 3 khz apart and transmit full ascii characters at 300 baud or faster under the same conditions. who do you think is going to get more data through.

and, for your edification, I tried listening on 160, 80 and 40 tonight.
all I hear with my ears was a huge amount of static crashing, some barely audible code, lots of heterodynes and static. I put linpsk on this box, used my sound card, tuned to the frequencies where I though digital modes would be (was barely able to hear anything through the noise, but my box here decoded several complete messages in just a few seconds using multiple bandpass filters less than 50 Hz wide (and using the DSP chip on the soundcard to do most of the audio processing). The machine was even able to decode the CW emissions, albiet at a much slower data rate (I don't know of anyone other than a machine that can send code at 300 characters per second). POINT IS: my machine with its capabilities was able to do far more than the human ear alone, AND thew digital modes with 20 over S-9 static were readable (90%). CW is too slow and the human ear/brain too unreliable given those circumstances.

oh yeah, ad-hominem attacks such as the first sentence of the second paragraph only serve to make you look foolish. I do believe that because of this, you have pretty much dropped the normal rules of debate, and thus, have lost you the arguement.

That's what I was referring to when I said that everybody had their own "style". You may have to use a different method to access the channels, according to the style that your particular mod was made.

Now that could be a problem. What are the particulars? Does the radio have receive audio? Does it have modulation on SSB? The chances are that two different mikes are not both bad. But it does help to check them on a known good radio.

> I'd still like to know what mod the tech went by, as is

The original tech may have utilized the PA and ANL -NB switches for some of the frequency mods. I never liked doing that unless you could get by with a single switch (which was rare). As long as you are required to use more switches than what's available on the radio, you might as well use all external switches, and leave the factory functionality intact.

Depends on who's listening. Regardless, your data rate is limited by the bandwidth of your filters, and you can't push RTTY through 30Hz filters any faster than you can CW. Plus, there are several advantages gained by using the latter: Morse, as used in radio communication, is universal; RTTY is not. Morse can be received and sent without any additional equipment to a tranceiver;

digital modes require specific hardware, software, firmware, a PC, or a really expensive rig (assuming you want to communicate under a comparable noise level). Mistakes made in Morse can be interpreted in real-time by the receiver; data errors result in loss of sync, require retrain of the data stream as well as retransmission of the packet and/or full message. Transmissions or chirps from nearby frequencies can be mentally 'tuned out' when using Morse, the brain being a kind of heuristic filter; no such filter exists for digital modes, and the same type of noise results in a garbled mess. Stations breaking in can be recognized immediately when using Morse; they are recognized as noise under digital modes. Shall I continue....?

>and, for your edification, I tried listening on 160, 80 and 40 tonight.

160m I can understand, but 80 and 40m? What are you running? Doesn't your rig have a basic AGC/ANL/AVC/-?- circuit? Because every time I turn on my old Hallicrafter's S-40 I can hear nice, clean, copyable CW on 80 -and- 40 at most any time, day or night. And I think if you ask anyone else here that has ever listened to those bands that they would say the same. Perhaps you need to put your radio into the shop for a checkup.

They don't allow the machine to take the test. And the human ear/brain has been very reliable for over a century and a half at decoding Morse. You just don't have the experience to know this. The fact is that no software can decode CW as quickly or as reliably as the human ear/brain -- even the people who write the software to decode Morse know that the PC can't possibly replace an experienced ear. I'll let you learn why on your own.

I think you are being overly sensitive. There was no ad-hominem attack. Actually, I thought I was being quite civil, especially when compared to the rest of the post in this group. Even if your perceptions led you to believe there was an attack, you should have been able to understand the rest of the post quite clearly.

Fishing charters don't take intentions, hallucinations, figments of your imagination, food stamps, cigarettes, empty aluminum beer cans, copper wire, or anything else you are used to using for currency.
Fahgeddabuddid!
BTW,,will you tape me on the air and make a wav file of me and post it here? I want the rest of the country to hear what you hear each and every time the pile' is in control of your radio world....hehehheh! It will shed some light on your rather angry and bizarre self-hatred and behavior. In fact, some may even begin to understand you're not really madd at the world and all cber's, just myself,,,,,,it's just that you have the most difficult manner in expressing yourself. Your clumsiness and lack of knowledge is responsible for your anger.,,you;re a fish out of water slowly suffocating, yet you continue to flop around on my plate until I decide the time has come to use you for plant fertilizer.
Keeping in mind your record of madd impotence and redundant and regurgitated bile all have come to expect of you, I'll even give you the time and frequency I'll be transmitting...but then again, you won't be able to understand cw...you'll have to ask a cb'er, freebander, or upperclassman to translate. Hint: upgrade! You have no respect, then again, you have been utterly shamed concerning your call sign.

Electronics,,,,,yea,,,lol..,,,cb radio and related items,,,not a clue. This is not an electroics board,,it's a cb forum and Frank telegraphed his knowledge of such several times in the past. He made certain of that regarding his erroneous claims concerning the popular freeband freqs. Remember when he claimed he was going to contact ALL the entities on the list that shows who the freqs are assigned? I have a feeling he contacted a few and found a pattern,,,the pattern that 'ol Twist showed where the freqs were otherwise abandoned and it was too much for the twisted psyche to handle. Frank was buried in that thread, compromising anything else he ever set forth.
In fact, if you don't remember just what was said, I will be more than happy to show Frank was in territory he knew absolutely zilch about...of course, it is why he dropped the thread faster than you dropping your jaw when you hear the Twisted show back in your receive.

Again,,(try and pay attention, here, eEric)..can you cite a single example of "those on here" that do not care if you are disabled who claim you either learn the code or you don't get the ticket. Just a single example, Eric.
Now,,again,,,it appears as if you are barking up the wrong tree. I have witnessed none claim what you attribute to this group. Examples?

You fail to note that among all the better modes of communication, none have the universal recognition as the morse signal for SOS does.

>Try asking someone in the general public >under 30 that. they'll go "HUH?".

(shrug) Doesn't change the validity of my above statement one iota.

If cw doesn't get through, you sure as hell ain't getting voice through.
You present an exception, not the norm.

>I didn't say voice. how about broad spectrum >digital and a few of the other digital modes?

More than half the world doesn't have digital technology available to the public, Eric. Try and remain relevant. Remember, the key word was "universal".

>if voice can't get through then CW is going to >be very hard pressed

My gosh,,,,you are a licensed hammie and making such erroneous statements. I need correct you here, Eric, as there may be some newbies reading this that may get the wrong impression. No Eric, cw is NOT hardpressed to get through when voice can't get through. In fact, it's the defacto default mode when all else fails.

>and the only things I've seen work reliably of >late are computer enhanced emission types.

Once again, you lose site of the topic: "universal" is the key term.

 Sponsored by who? And what made their "sponsor" any more official than any other organization that decides to endorse a kit? You already admitted you can be "up to speed" in no time concerning code, so pardon my curiosity while you look to set forth disabilities as a preclusion to your ability to master it.

>ok, name me a BIG NAME kit dealer other >than Heathkit?

I made no such claim. I merely questioned your claim and you answer with another question. For the sake of relevancy, who was the "sponsor" and WHAT made this sponsor any more official than any other organization that decides to endorse a product?

Ok, Then explain what you mean when you said "sponsor" and "official".

Not so, Eric. In fact, we have all seen the rather angry and frustrated and shamed nocodes on this forum claim that their is no reason for a cber not to get a hammie license..in fact, I believe you claimed it in the past, did you not? But when the same standard is presented to you who are anti-code by those that hold a higher status of licensure than yourself,,you cry foul and call names and bring ad hominems..illustrating the magnitude of hypocrisy several of you employ.

SO WHAT IS THE BIG DILL.
Like we need to get after them , there is more to worry about than some kits, Linear, CB, broadcasters airing the wrong words over the broadcast bands, like the new bill just passed is going to cover, trying to scare the shit out of the industry. All because of the superbowl bullshit and that wasn't that bad. People are going nuts
What about the real problem of the middleasterns trying to screw up this country and blow up things.
Go after them, but that is to hard to do., not easy but its easy to screw the little guy.

The broken switches were mentioned on Ebay. The audio was untested as of when it was put on Ebay. Since I decided to keep it and try to get it working, I've found there might be a problem with the audio.

Why do you ask, you wanna buy it from me? :)

Twist,

Upgrading means nothing. When an 8 year old can pass an extra - well, that tells me volumes about the difficulty of the tests today. CW has nothing to do with it. As far as the rest, you may well be correct. I suspect that there are a number of CBers with more technical knowlege than a number of amateurs.

Just my humble opinion, of course ;)

Fishing charters don't take intentions, hallucinations, figments of your imagination, food stamps, cigarettes, empty aluminum beer cans, copper wire, or anything else you are used to using for currency.
Fahgeddabuddid!
BTW,,will you tape me on the air and make a wav file of me and post it here? I want the rest of the country to hear what you hear each and every time the pile' is in control of your radio world....hehehheh! It will shed some light on your rather angry and bizarre self-hatred and behavior. In fact, some may even begin to understand you're not really madd at the world and all cber's, just myself,,,,,,it's just that you have the most difficult manner in expressing yourself. Your clumsiness and lack of knowledge is responsible for your anger.,,you;re a fish out of water slowly suffocating, yet you continue to flop around on my plate until I decide the time has come to use you for plant fertilizer.
Keeping in mind your record of madd impotence and redundant and regurgitated bile all have come to expect of you, I'll even give you the time and frequency I'll be transmitting...but then again, you won't be able to understand cw...you'll have to ask a cb'er, freebander, or upperclassman to translate. Hint: upgrade! You have no respect, then again, you have been utterly shamed concerning your call sign.

Cool. I'm going to slow smoke a tri-tip &

I'll admit I sent a complaint, but George still can't tell the truth about him complaining to my ISP for using his screen nic WA3MOJ@AOL.COM
I also know of many others that complained. I also got a response saying he got spanked, but I could care less as long as he's sticks with one screen nic.

Believe it or not, I've never modified any cb radio. I have repaired a few cb radios many moons ago. The real problem appears to be a few folks that simply want to flame. Sure there are a few illegal folks - some of them with amateur licenses too! Regardless, most folks are reasonably law-abiding and everyone is presumed innocent until they have been convicted in a court of law. I would hope you do subscribe to that. In any event, if some folks harass, they can likely expect the same back.

It isn't rocket science ;)

The folks who allegedly harass are to be "presumed innocent until they have been convicted in a court of law".

I did have one guy who honestly asked if I was a "secret agent" once when I came out of a local 7/11 one night. He even gave me a buck for the Ham literature, that I keep in the vehicle, I gave him for cases like that.

> why you hate cb'ers has little

interference

Tell that to the US congress, the former president, and the FCC. It took all of them to get that law passed that lets local police prosecute CBers for interference problems. And that law got started by a group of Hams who got sick and tired of getting blamed for the actions of illegal CB operators, such as yourself. And that law, and the issues, with is a done deal. That hams proved their point or the law never would have gotten signed in to law and that's a fact. The debate is over.

Woodward doesn't go by my apartment. Check your

me. You should call first however. If you show up unannounced I'll most likely be out of town working, thus you would have wasted your time for

Jim, I asked the same thing the first time I went out west. It appears to be a mostly west-northwestern thing, I think. Very good cut of meat for a smoker....much more tender than brisket, with less fat. I wish they were more available in the south, although any good meat market can manage the cut for you, if you so desire. It's a bottom sirloin cut, as you can see in the link below.

Wondering if anyone out there used or still has an old homebase from the 70/80s.....
I fancy a piece of kit from the good old days and rather like the look of the President Madison (with the flip clock)
I wonder what boards / performance was like.....

the Ham Jumbo/Excaliber seems to go for double the price of others is this justified or is it just taste.........

thx in advance for opinions and info

we need to settle this once and for all, I am not george, I am I Am Not George. Duke of windsor said there is a person posting on the French remailer with Comcast in the organization line who is not george. I agree I say it Tim Nebo trolling with his aol account trying to make Leland look bad. Fagshark and Steveo admitted forging WA3MOJ several times to cause trouble. And attention assclowns I never said I was WA3MOJ, any post any time any where. The real WA3MOJ has been nowhere near this NG and some day some one of you will end up with a lawsuit for using his identity.

Amateur Radio Newsline(tm) Report 1387 ï¿½ March 12, 2004

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1387 with a release date of Friday, March 12th, 2004 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T. The FCC says that automatic stations have to avoid willful interference to other hams. Also, a magazine editor speaks out on restructuring. Hear the details on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1387 coming your way right now.

(Billboard Cart Here)

RADIO LAW: AUTOMATIC RESPONSIBILITY FOR ALL HAMS

The FCC says no Amateur Radio stations are exempt from the requirement to avoid unnecessarily interference with ongoing communications. This includes automated operations. Amateur Radio Newsline's Rick Johnson, KA9VZD, is in Antioch Illinois with rest of the story:

According to the ARRL Letter, FCC rules enforcer Riley Hollingsworth says that it is important for all stations, including automated ones, to realize that they are responsible for any interference caused when they come on top of existing communications Hollingswoth told the ARRL Letter that an amateur had written to him alleging that what appeared to be automated PACTOR stations that were routinely starting to transmit atop PSK31 QSO's on 40 and 30 meters.

In response, Hollingsworth noted that there are no exemptions for automated stations. Rather that the Amateur Service rules address interference with other communications. The rules say that no amateur operator shall willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference to any other radio communication or signal.

The amateur who filed the complaint reportedly also contacted one of the PACTOR stations in an effort to develop a dialogue to solve the problem. Hollingsworth expressed the hope that all involved in the PACTOR versus P-S-K 31 problem can work things out. He also points out that stations responding to automated interrogations are equally responsible for not causing interference to existing communications.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Rick Johnson, KA9VZD, near Chicago.

Hollingsworth also issued advisory letters to three hams who operate automated stations to remind them of the rules. (FCC, ARRL Letter)

ENFORCEMENT: HAM WHO ALLEGEDLY HARASSED POLICE ASKED TO EXPLAIN OR TURN IN HIS LICENSE

The FCC Enforcement Bureau is once again naming names and it has asked one ham to explain why he allegedly transmitted on a public service frequency to harass law enforcement. Henry Feinberg, K2SSQ, has the rest of the story:

In a February 18th letter to Russel A. Brown, N1KHV, of Palmer, Massachusetts the FCC says that it is considering action based on a February 3rd Incident Report from the Monson Police Department and a February 15th Investigatory Report and a Statement. The latter reportedly was signed by Brown and documents his deliberate operation on Police frequencies without a license. This, the FCC alleges was an attempt by Brown to interfere with police communications and harass police personnel.

The FCC inquiry makes it clear that the information he submits will be used by the Commission in determining Brown's qualifications to remain a Commission licensee. The FCC also has given Brown the option of voluntarily submitting his license for cancellation in order to avoid a hearing on the issue. Brown was told to indicate his preference in his response which was due within 20 days of the FCC letter of inquiry being issued.

The FCC also warned Brown that providing a willfully false or misleading reply would be the subject of a separate enforcement action and could subject him to additional sanctions. (FCC)

ENFORCEMENT: CHANGING CALL SIGNS BRINGS FCC INQUIRY

The FCC wants to know why a Tennessee radio amateur keeps changing his call sign. And, in a February 18th letter it is asking Donald H. Binkley the regulatory agency is asking the Nashville ham to explain why he has been jumping between two calls for the past six years.

According to its letter of inquiry, Binkley currently holds the call K4WX. The FCC says that license grant was originally made on September 23, 1998. On June 19, 2000 the FCC says that Binkley filed an application to change his call sign from K4WX to N4ZZ. That application was granted on July 7, 2000. Then, on May 15, 2002 Binkley applied to change your his sign from N4ZZ back to K4WX. That application was granted on June 4, 2002. Now, Binkley has applied for the N4ZZ call once again and this time his request appears to have raised a proverbial red flag with the FCC. As a result, the Wireless Telecommunications Bureau has forwarded the latest application to the enforcement folks for follow-up and review.

In his letter to Binkley, FCC rules enforcer Riley Hollingsworth says that these ongoing applications raise questions about apparent abuse of the licensing system. He notes that the Communications Act gives the Commission the authority to request information from licensees and applicants regarding their applications and operation of their radio stations. And that's just what he is doing with Binkley,

He has told K4WX to respond stating his intentions regarding the filing of these applications. He also told Binkley to let his office know which of the two call signs he wants to keep. Binkley was given the usual 20 days from the date of the FCC's letter to respond. (FCC)

RESTRUCTURING: AN EDITOR SPEAKS OUT

The editor of a popular ham radio magazine says that his readers have strong opinions on restructuring, and he wants them shared. In an interview with Amateur Radio Newsline's Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, CQ's Rich Moseson, W2VU, talked on a general level about the various restructuring proposals and about his upcoming C-Q reader survey:

--

CQ's Rich Moseson says there's been an active dialogue going among readers of the magazine since the latest round of amateur radio licensing restructuring proposals landed at the FCC's door:

--

"We have a whole raft of petitions that have been filed with the FCC over the past several months all proposing various things from radical changes to little tweaks from eliminating the code requirements completely to adding new ones," Moseson says. "It's a great opportunity for discussion and for a forum on what the ham community thinks our hobby should look like going into the future."

--

Moseson says despite the diversity of those proposals, he says there seemed to be some consensus emerging among those who submitted comments to the FCC and other forums:

"It looked like the majority of those people would agree on a restructuring where the code requirement was kept in place at 5 wpm for Extra," he says.

--

And now that the American Radio Relay League has weighed in with its own proposal - a no-code entry license called the Novice - complete with HF privileges, Moseson says CQ wants to know what readers think.

"W5YI's 'Washington Readout' colum is all about the League's proposal in detail and our reader survey for April is also about the League's proposal," Moseson explains. "It's going to be asking our readers what they think of each of the major points of the proposal, whether they agree or disagree or have no opinion. And we'll, of course, be reporting the results of that survey in probably the June issue."

--

Even if you're not a CQ subscriber, you can find a copy at a newstand or bookstore.

Moseson says amateur radio must and has kept in step with the times:

"I'm not sure what we're going to come out of this with or what direction it's going to go to, " Moseson says. "But one of the points that I've always made is that if we are going to keep ham radio as a healthy, vital hobby and service then it has to adapt to changing times and the licensing structure has been doing that over the course of many, many years."

--

As to how soon, we might expect action from Washington. Moseson says it's difficult to predict:

--

"My guess would be the earliest that you'd see any kind of a decision from the FCC would be the end of this year, probably more likely about a year from now in the spring of 2005," Moseson says.
--

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, in Philadelphia.

--

Moseson also offered his opinion that even if Morse testing was not included as a requirement for any of the license classes that it wouldn't go away. He says CW contest entries have grown in recent years. Thats good news for those advocating long term preservation of the historic mode. (ARNewsline(tm))

CONVENTIONS: THE NAB HAM RADIO RECEPTION IN LAS VEGAS NV.

Its only a few weeks until the National Association of Broadcasters holds its 2004 gathering. One of the major social events that occurs at the NAB convention each year is the `Amateur Radio Reception'. This year will be no exception but for the first time ever this years `Ham Radio Reception' will be hosted by Heil Sound, Limited and its well known owners Bob, K9EID, and Sarah Heil. They would like to invite any and all amateur radio operators who will be in attendance at the NAB show to join them for this annual fun event.

Audio Only: Hear it at http://www.arnewsline.org

Bob and Sarah are promising a fun time. They are also planning appearances by some of their special friends as well as dozens of attendance prizes that will be given during the two hour reception. This includes several of the new Heil Poline performance microphones autographed by legendary Eagles guitarist Joe Walsh, WB6ACU.

This years NAB Ham Radio Reception takes place Wednesday April 21st, from 6 to 9 P.M. local time. The venue is the Las Vegas Hilton Hotel, Ballrom B. Of coarse, thats in Las Vegas, Nevada. Bob says all that is required to join in the festivities is to bring a smile and your NAB attendance badge for complimentary food and drink.

For more information please feel to contact Bob or Sarah at 618-257-3000 or by e-mail to bob@heilsound.com. The Heil's say that they hope to see you there. (ARNewsline(tm))

CONVENTIONS AND HAMFEST TRAVEL TIPS: TRY FLYING OR TAKE THE BUS

Talking of ham radio social events, its no secret that gasoline prices here in the United States at historically high levels, and the Department of Energy saying to expect prices to go a lot higher. As a result, many hams are asking the rhetorical question: Can I afford to go to a major hamfest or convention this year? Especially one of the big ones like Dayton or NAB. The answer for the most part is yes, but a lot depends on where you live and how far you have to travel to that show. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, explores some alternatives to driving your own car:

If your QTH is several hundred miles away from your favorite hamfest and you drive a gas guzzling vehicle like an S-U-V then you may think twice about going this year. That is, unless you can find an alternative to $3 or more for each gallon of gasoline. Well, there are currently two very good transportation buys available if you are willing to give up the luxury of a personal vehicle.

Lets take a centrally located city like Dallas, Texas. There's a big convention every year in the suburb of Arlington that draws exhibitors and attendees from all across the country. If you live in Houston and plan to attend, its about a 275 mile drive each way. In an S-U-V that gets 10 to 12 miles to a gallon at the projected $3 a gallon the drive one way will cost about $81 each way or $162 round trip. Compare that to the $89 round trip currently being offered between the two cities on Delta and Continental airlines. Want cheaper? Go greyhound, buy your ticket 7 days in advance and it will only cost you $58 round trip.

And what about Hamvention in Dayton Ohio? That's coming up in May. Well, its the same thing here. Using Chicago as your home, the trip is also about 275 miles each way. To drive will cost about the same but make your reservations now and fly out of Chicago's Midway airport and ATA will take you full circle for about $120. Go Greyhound and you can go full circle for only $82

Live further way. Say Los Angeles or San Francisco? Well, you can really get a bargain. Fly United Airlines out of Santa Ana California early in the morning with a connection in Chicago and you can go round trip for $255. By way of comparison, that same ticket a year ago went for about $100 more. And for you Northern California folks, you can do the trip for $283 out of San Jose on American Trans Air.

And the usual disclaimer here,. The prices we quoted we those showing on Sunday March 8th on several travel websites including greyhound.com and orbitz.com. Since the airlines are notorious for changing prices at a moments notice, these could be gone by the time this newscast goes to air.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, reporting.

Two final tips that most frequent flyers already know. First, book early. The best prices for flights are usually sold on-line months in advance. Also, keep an eye on all of the Internet based travel discounters and check their prices daily. You never know when a flight or a bus ride to your favorite hamfest may be a lot less expensive than what it costs to drive your vehicle. And you won't have to hunt for a place to park, either. (ARNewsline(tm))

INTERNET SCAMS: ARRL AND RAC E-MAIL BEING SPOOFED

The ARRL and Radio Amateurs of Canada are warning their members and others about bogus or spoofed messages carrying ARRL.net or rac.ca suffixes. Both organizations say that they have been notifoed by people who have received e-mail messages alleging to be from the ARRL E-Mail Forwarding Service or directly from Radio Amateurs of Canada.

The senders of the e-mail encourage you to open the file or an attachment to the e-mail. Don't do it. These messages are false and are the result of one of the variants on a number of viruses now permeating the Internet. The attached file contains variations of worm viruses, MyDoom, Bagle and Netsky. Opening the file could result in your computer being infected. The bottom line: Delete the message and forget you ever got it. Your computer will be a lot safer that way. (ARRL, RAC)

HAM RADIO ADVENTURE: COMMUNICATORS NEEDED FOR CAVEING EXPEDITION

Gulf Coast United States, along with Caribbean, or South America base station operators are needed for communication on the ham bands with a scientific expedition. This, in July through August time frame.

The 60 day expedition will explore deep caves in the high Andes mountains and jungle in the western Amazon area of South America. Expedition access to the remote areas is via trekking on foot and pack animal. The expedition will use a solar and battery powered 20 Watt backpack transceiver. Antennas will be a wire dipole or vertical. A miniature notebook computer will be along for digital operations.

Communications will consist of position reports, some short messages with families of expedition members, and any possible emergency or medical messages. All operation will be non-commercial.

Operators with good base stations, efficient antennas and low noise locations are needed on the 40 through 15 meter amateur bands. The operations will use SSB, CW and a variety of digital modes. If you are interested, e-mail Bonnie Crystal, KQ6XA, at radioadventure@aol.com. (KC5FM, KQ6XA)

RADIO LAW: CONGRESS ON ITS WAY TO INCVREASING INDECENCY PENALTIES AGAINST BROADCASTERS

Federal legislators are inching closer to increasing the penalties against broadcasters who permit indecent or obscene material to hit the public airwaves. This, as the House and Senate Commerce committees pass bills that would sharply boost fines of television and radio broadcasters who violate indecency regulations.

The U.S. House of Representatives measure increases fines to as much as $500,000 per violation from the current $27,500 per violation level. That version also contains a so-called three strikes provision that would require the FCC to hold a hearing to determine whether a broadcast license should be revoked after three violations take place. It also permits the FCC to weigh heftier penalties against the person who actually utters indecent material on the air as well as the ability to go after the network that broadcast the material in addition to the individual stations. Right now, the FCC can only fine the licensed station that aired the material and has limited ability to penalize the person who said it.

Current FCC rules limit indecent material presented in a patently offensive manner to late night hours, when children are less likely to be a part of the listening or viewing audience. In some past instances the broadcast standard has been applied to obsenity and indecency issues in private radio including the Amateur service.

Newsline attempted to find out if new and higher penalties directed by Congress might be applied to ham radio. We were told that at this point, the FCC's and Congressional actions are directed at the "broadcasters" and not at Amateur Radio. (Published news reports)

HAM RADIO BUSINESS: QRZ.COM HAS T1 TROUBLE

If you tried to access the QRZ.com website late on Thursday March 4th you probably found it down. The sites owner, Fred Lloyd, AA7BQ, reports that around 1800 UTC both of the dual T1 lines that supply the sites 3 Megabit feed to the Internet went down.

According to Lloyd, the sites network is supplier is Cable & Wireless and his location is served by two leased high-speed lines by the local phone company, Qwest. The Qwest lines connect the Arizona based QRZ.com servers to the Cable & Wireless location in downtown Phoenix.

About 2 hours after the outage was reported on Thursday, one of the lines was repaired and brought back up. For reasons unknown to Lloyd, the second T1 line has not been brought back up. Now, however, instead of a Qwest problem, it appears that the second line was intentionally disconnected by Cable & Wireless. Lloyd says that Cable & Wireless is currently pulling out of some of the less profitable market areas. Apparently, QRZ was mistakenly disconnected from the grid even though Lloyd had previously been assured that Cable & Wireless is not pulling out of his market. This put Q-R-Zeds back at 1.5 Megabits. That's the same speed that they were for years before the upgrade last December. (QRZ.com)

WORLDBEAT: TOWARD RESOLVING THE MEXICO - US 560, 780 & 920 KHZ BORDER SITUATIONS

An update on the radio border war developing between Mexico and the United States as we reported a few weeks ago. According to Joseph Berring in a letter to the CGC Communicator, the alleged problems caused by the Mexican broadcasters on 560, 780 and 920 kHz has become a top priority for both the U.S. FCC and the State Dept. as well as for the Mexican Administration.

According to Berring, top U.S. officials recently met with their Mexican counterparts in Mexico City. Berring observes that despite the controversy and problems that have arisen, Mexico's position has been very clear and unwavering. That being existing bilateral agreements are valid and they have not been violated. Additionally, Mexico seems to have some complaints of its own regarding U.S. stations.

The United States position is obviously a bit different. Not only does the US administration feel that there are clear violations, but that there are specific sidebar agreements dating as far back as 1996 that address the issues at hand.

Berring, who is a consultant on United States and Mexico border issues says to stay tuned. It should prove interesting. (CGC)

THAT FINAL ITEM: TRANSMITTING DATA FROM MARS - AND CONSERVING ENERGY

And finally this week, were you aware that the pair of Mars Rovers now exploring the red planet actually have two ways to send data back to Earth? They can send it direct or indirect. Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, has more:

As you might expect, direct entails using the rovers own high-powered microwave systems and using up a lot of very precious power reserves. Kind of like making a long distance contact on 2 meter FM simplex. You can do it but you need high power and a very directional antenna.

The indirect method uses low-powered UHF links to relay the data to orbiting satellites. These satellites then use their high-powered transmitters to beam the data back to scientists. Thats not much diferent than working a long distance on 2 meters, but doing it with an H-T through your favorite repeater.

To save energy on the solar powered rovers, the UHF relay method is preferred. As of February 18th, the two rovers had sent 10 billion bits of data from Mars to Earth. Of this, only 18% of that data was transmitted directly. The rest was relayed through the Mars Odyssey and Mars Global Surveyor satellites.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, in Los Angeles.

Picked up an amp from an estate this weekend. Need some help identifying it. It has no identifying names or marks anywhere.

Here is a description:
Amp has 10 tubes total, 1- 6KD6 driving 3- 6LF6 driving 6- 6LF6
Gold aluminum faceplate
17" wide 9" tall 11.5" deep
Knobs left to right are , Plate, Final Band Switch 10, 15, 20, 40, Antenna, Place Driver Switch 10, 15, 20, 40, Coupling
4 switches in middle at bottom

Has seperate small silver box with transformer in it that connects via a cable to the back.
Looks to be a well made and clean amplifier with circuit boards for the power supply circuits in the bottom. Any help identifying this would be great.

Thanks,

My point exactly.

There is no federal law that exempts a licensed radio operator from other violations he makes in the operation of his station. Such violations may include, but not limited to, causing a nuisance, trespassing, local noise ordinances, construction/building code violations, etc, etc.

Nor have I, but I do know of at least two cases where radio operators were sucessfully sued in civil court for causing a nuisance. The articles didn't state whether those operators were licensed or not. But since they weren't prosecuted for violating federal laws, the issue of licensure is moot, and therefore a ham can indeed be held responsible under local laws for causing a nuisance. I'll even bet you that it has happened already, because there sure are a lot of high-and-mighty hams who think that the feds are going to come running to protect their sorry asses if they so much as get a speeding ticket while jawing on their mobile. Fortunately, it just doesn't work that way, Bill.

And now I'll ask -you- if you can provide one case where a ham was excused from violating a local law because he was licensed.

The first is a horizontally polarized dipole, that is folded into a half-loop. Interesting idea.

Another one you don't see a lot of is a hairpin. Don't know why, it's got gain over a 1/4 wave, but at a slight cost in complexity.

Pretty much dead on. An excellent cut of meat to smoke or BBQ.

Well not really, but I got one some 20 plus years ago in a pawn shop, never failed me yet.
I figured at the time, if most merchant seaman used them, they must work pretty good.

Examples please. How is operating a legal CB station in your own home or even in a vehicle in any way an act of trespass.

Again, examples please. Unless the CB (or ham) has a speaker blaring into the neighborhood, just how would legal operation of a CB or ham station fall under any local noise ordinance?

> construction/building code violations, etc, etc.

Again, examples please. Yes, one can be in violation of building or construction codes for certain antenna installations if done without a permit, but evn so, that would just cause a CBer or ham to eliminate the code violation. Having done so (i.e. elimated the code violation) then the CBer or ham could certainly install an antenna in accordance to local codes or file for the appropriate permits and, if applicable, apply for a variance (e.g.
to put up a tower above locally permitted height).

How about some facts as to those cases.

Anyone can be sued. What was the basis of the civil nuisance complaint? More to the point, if it is a "civil" suit, then it is NOT a violation of local ordinances under municipal law.

You keep saying that but offer not one concrete example..
or even a hypothetical case to discuss.

I truly doubt your speeding ticket analogy. BUT... let's use that for the moment. Speeding is NOT a radio operation related charge and has ZERO relationship to this discussion.

> Fortunately, it just doesn't work that way, Bill.

Fortunately? In actuality, you have yet to show even one factual example.

> And now I'll ask -you- if you can provide
> one case where a ham was excused from > violating a local law because he was licensed.

Sorry, that's not my position to prove. The question is raised from the point of IF and WHEN any ham was even charged under any of the local ordinances you argue on a general basis...i.e nuisance laws, noise ordinances, trespass, etc.

Again, even for construction code or building code violations, such violations are NOT for operation, but rather for construction (usually, if not always,
for some sort of antenna or tower installation).

Cheers,

That's good news as it eliminates the audio amp/modulator I.C., which has been discontinued and is generally not available, except from someone who might have some old stock.

Assuming that the mikes are good (and wired correctly!), your best bet would be checking the mike preamp I.C., and the related circuitry.
This is something that might be best accomplished with an oscilloscope, (working forward) or a signal injector (working backward).

To begin with, I quoted a newspaper article about a case here in Spokane:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=3ade1b9d.77554%40news.cet.com

And Twisty was nice enough to find a reference to another case on the other side of the state. I read the article after it was posted, but that was a couple years ago and you will have to search the referenced newpaper's archives to find it again:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=QE9h6.153%24L35.40420%40news.uswest.net

That's two cases from one state. I'm sure there are more.

>if it is a "civil" suit, then it is NOT a violation of local ordinances
>under municipal law.

Now where did you get that idea? You can't file a complaint, civil OR criminal, unless there is an alleged violation of law, and it must be a law under which a remedy can be granted. Otherwise it gets tossed out of court.

>> And now I'll ask -you- if you can provide
>> one case where a ham was excused from
>> violating a local law because he was licensed.
>Sorry, that's not my position to prove.

Too bad, because that was an easy one. As it turns out there -is- a federal law that preempts local laws from dealing with RFI-related issues, and it has been exercised many times. Instead of being defensively lazy you could have done a quick search on google and found the answer. Regardless.....

The FCC may have declared that any state or local RFI regulations are preempted by federal regs, but when the FCC won't get off it's lazy ass to enforce their own laws, that leaves victims with no remedy against asshole hams. Now any judge has the right to make any decision he/she deems legal and appropriate. Usually the courts side with the FCC, but evidently there are a few cases (such as the ones above) where they don't. And we all know (or should know) the legal process by now: If the decision should be against the FCC, the decision is not void just because a law exists which contradicts the decision. The case must go through the process of adjudication; i.e, the appeals courts. Most such cases can be appealed, one exception being Small Claims Courts in WA which doesn't allow appeals, only trials de novo. But on appeal there arises another thorn in the bush -- the FCC suddenly gets allergic to higher courts whenever there is a case that makes a challenge to their authority, especially to the constitutionality of their laws. So if a case ever looks like it might end with a ruling that the FCC's preemptions are in conflict with the civil rights of the general public (as would be the case with a public nuisance) you can bet that the case will be quickly and quietly dropped. It has happened before and it will happen again.

To be blunt: as long as fat, lazy hams keep causing interference under the umbrella of preemption, the probability increases that they will find their defense is no longer valid. It may happen case by case or in one fell swoop, but it -will- happen. I believe this for three reasons: First, because there is an increasing number of people that are fed up with the FCC's inattention to RFI complaints; Second, because hams are becoming increasingly cocky about their cloak of federal protection; and Third, after doing a quick search on google I found several current statutes where RFI is declared illegal in spite of the FCC's preemption, so it looks like the FCC's fear tactics aren't working anymore. If the FCC doesn't start enforcing violations by otherwise legal hams they run the risk of forfeiting some jurisdiction to lower authorities as they did with HR2346.

So believe what you want about the law -- the facts are that people aren't going to give up their entertainment, electronic conveniences and basic communications devices just because some smart-ass ham thinks the feds will always be there to defend him even when he's too lazy to clean up his signal. They won't. And they won't because this country is governed by the majority of the people, not a few holier-than-thou hams.

The reality of the situation is that if your telephone is clean and your stereo is clean in your house, a neighbor would have a far more difficult time of convincing anyone that the problem is your transmitter and not their poorly filtered consumer equipment. Often, changing the direction of an antenna may reduce the problem many dBs. It is much easier to work with a neighbor than to let things get that far out of hand.

I got home from work about an hour ago. While I was there I checked through the records for interference issues the station has had in the past. There were a few to be sure. Some of them were found to be simple imaging in cheap, single conversion receivers. There was one incident where the station had a bad trap which resulted in several complaints all at once, but the problem was quickly fixed. However, not one complaint was about RFI in a cordless phone, and no complaints were found where the cause was unintentional rectification. Mind you that this station transmits many kilowatts and that residents live less than a 1/4 mile from the tower, many of whom have televisions, cordless phones, and all the other electronic devices which hams claim are responsible for receiving interference due to 'poor filtering'.

On the other hand, the station has had incidents where it was the -receiver- of RFI despite a level of filtering above and beyond what should be required to prevent interference (much of which I have installed myself). Filtering does nothing to stop RFI when the transmitter is dirty. I have to prove this fact to at least a couple hams each year by parking the van outside their house and showing them their spurs on the spectrum analyzer. And these are hams who swear up and down that their signal is clean and that the problem is with the neighbors equipment. Most of them clean up their act in a hurry. The rest get a complaint filed with the FCC by the station because they are interfering with the station's transmission.

My point is that interference is almost always caused by excessive harmonic emissions; i.e, poor filtering at the transmitter, not at the receiver (or device receiving the interference) as most hams claim is the case.

BTW, I should point out that we at the station take care of our listeners and respond to complaints of interference to our signal wherever they occur (within our contour). Many times that interference is caused by radio operators, legal or not. We determine the nature of the interference then attempt to resolve it. If it is caused by a radio operator that is unwilling to clean up his act then the station files a complaint with the FCC. We get a better response from the FCC than do a few angry neighbors because the station pays a lot of money to stay on the air, and the FCC responds to money, not people.

The initial court decision can and may well be reversed on appeal.
I have not read of any case being upheld on local jurisdiction vs federal preemption when it gets to the feds.

And why would a ham or a CD interference case end up

Dropped by who? If I am being sued and my defense is federal preemption, then why would I drop the case? The FCC doesn't even have to be a direct party to the case for the issue of federal preemption to be argued.

been challenged.

Yet I find no such "doom and gloom" predictions or examples being recorded in ham publications. The fact that some ill advised local government enacts a piece of law that "outlaws" interference doesn't makethe law immune to being overturned on the preemption basis. The argument for pre-emption, if made, doesn't even require the FCC to do so. the defendent's attorney can and likely would raise the argument.

I am about to begin the installation of a cb in my 31' motorhome.
I'd like any info regarding antenna, coax length, power options and anything that I didn't think of.

I'd like to know what problems you encountered and how you overcame them. I want to know what works and more important what doesn't.

I will follow this thread closely. Thanks.

I would install two CB's in your motor home for maximum performance. Up front at the drivers seat you'd do best with a Undiden Pc68xl and a Wilson 1000 antenna center mounted above the cab. In the back I'd seriously look into investing into either a new Ranger 2950dx or a used Uniden HR2510 off of Ebay that's already converted to the CB and freeband channels. With either of these radios, a Antron 99 or Imax 2000 antenna, and a very easy "like 5 minutes" to put up telescoping pole from radio shack with some good rg8x coax and you'll have a fine portable base station that will talk around the world and compete with the best of them no matter where you are and you'll really be able to enjoy it when your stationary. With a dual setup like this you will have no compromises.

before anyone asks how does one put up an ant99 off a mobile home i saw a setup using a 6' tripod about 6 meters off the back of the m'home. he was on the beach and smoked. problem he had was securing it against a stiff wind.

Down here when were on the beach we don't worry about mounting them very high for any dx talking but then again that's usually the only reason were ever on the beach to begin with. Nothing like 4kw's and a ground plane on the salt water. Tall antenna's are a problem for the local talking city dweller type of operators. Btw, how have you been Jim? It's great hearing from you! Woah! I think it's time to look at things from a different perspective. One of the main reasons why the FCC, as you put it, became "inattentive", has to do with the fact that the great majority of RFI complaints are the fault of the electronic widget being interfered with. Since the emphasis has been on producing things cheaply, and with the minimum amount of engineering, it should not be surprising that these devices are made so poorly with respect to R.F. immunity. Hams are not so much getting "cocky" as they are becoming increasingly defensive as more and more RFI problems are being leveled at their feet which didn't exist 10 or 15 years ago. The FCC should mandate tougher shielding specs for consumer widgets, and the majority of RFI problems would disappear.

You can argue the relative difference between a person's "right" to enjoy their radio hobby versus another's "right" to enjoy internet porn. But if the ham is clean (and they usually are), it's not his problem directly.

>So believe what you want about the law -- the facts are that people aren't going >to give up their entertainment, electronic conveniences and basic communications >devices just because some smart-ass ham thinks the feds will always be there to >defend him even when he's too lazy to clean up his signal.

This is not the case in most instances. You have to remember these are hams, not class "C" amp running CB'ers. Most hams understand RFI to some degree, and most ham equipment is manufactured to comply with spurious emissions requirements. Hams will do what they can to clean up their own act. But once they've done all that they can do on their end, if the problem's still there, then what?

> They won't. And they >won't because this country is governed by the majority of the people, not a few >holier-than-thou hams.

You might want to re-examine your conjecture there. While I would agree that logically the rule of the majority would make the most sense. But especially in the last several years, there have been increasingly small, but highly vocal, special interest lobbyists which have managed to thwart the wishes of the majority, and have been responsible for laws which protect the "rights" of certain minorities above and beyond what the majority enjoys. Take a look at political correctness if you have any doubts.

The problem is with the cheap Chinese produced electronic devices. Something needs to be done to minimize their susceptibility to RFI. Trying to sweep the problem of RFI under the rug (and thereby saving XYZ company the cost of making RFI resistant devices) by persecuting legally operating hams is not , IMHO, the right solution. Remember, that what they do to hams, will also trickle down to CBers, since the RFI potential is worse on the CB band, with the preponderance of illegally operating stations who are there.

But Jim's point is valid. If your transmitter is truly "dirty", then you will interfere with your own equipment as well as any neighbors.
Harmonics do not discriminate. If you can demonstrate to your neighbors that you can watch TV, listen to the stereo, and surf the internet with RFI immunity, it lets the air out of their balloon.

On the other hand, I used to live about a mile and a half away from both an FM radio station's transmitter, a directionally phased AM broadcast transmitter and a "low power" AM broadcast transmitter.
Those things used to come though all sorts of poorly shielded stuff.
It wasn't the stations' fault, we were just getting hammered with a large RF field. Every now and then the phone company would have to come out and tighten their connections, as they would act like an antenna, and a poor joint would become a diode and we'd have a radio station in the background when talking on the phone. It wasn't a dirty transmitter. It was near field rectification, and RF overload. The plus side of all this, was that the local area was so used to dealing with the "bleed" from the commercial stations, that RFI shielding was a priority for utilities, and that worked in my favor as a CBer and ham.

I've been doing radio for over 30 years now and I've seen exactly the opposite. Most of the cases (and the FCC database backs this up) of RFI are the fault of the receiving equipment. When you run a squeaky clean 4 watt CB, and 100 watt H.F. ham gear and you still have interference complaints, with all filtering, grounding, and proper antenna decoupling in place, it's usually not the ham's fault. If you're going to fight the fight, it's helpful to have all of your facts straight before you do.

To be blunt: as long as fat, lazy hams keep causing interference under the umbrella of preemption, the probability increases that they will find their defense is no longer valid. It may happen case by case or in one fell swoop, but it -will- happen. I believe this for three reasons: First, because there is an increasing number of people that are fed up with the FCC's inattention to RFI complaints; Second, because hams are becoming increasingly cocky about their cloak of federal protection; and Third, after doing a quick search on google I found several current statutes where RFI is declared illegal in spite of the FCC's preemption, so it looks like the FCC's fear tactics aren't working anymore. If the FCC doesn't start enforcing violations by otherwise legal hams they run the risk of forfeiting some jurisdiction to lower authorities as they did with HR2346.

That is such absolute bullshit. The FCC has claimed, several times regarding enforcement that: A) their budget (IE: $$) is responsible for the sad shape they find themselves, and which (B) indirectly affects ALL FCC activities. Please provide for your claim and cite a single source (like,,say,,the FCC!) that supports your conjured but incorrect theory that the FCC's "inattentiveness" regarding interference enforcement is somehow related to less-than-stellar gadget construction.

That's not what I have experienced. If these cheap devices are so suseptible to fundamental RF transmissions, how can so many of them be used without trouble next to radio and television stations? The majority of interference is caused to televisions, and cordless phones ring in at second place on the list (excuse the pun). They work on frequencies that extend from low VHF up to about 1 GHz, yet there are almost no reports of interference above VHF. In fact, most of the interference happens in the low TV channels and low-VHF cordless phones. Not suprisingly, this is the area where harmonics from high HF are strongest. And I know for a fact that a ham can run 1kW on HF and not cause interference to televisions, cordless phones, radios, or just about anything else accused of having poor RFI rejection because I have seen more than one station that does.
And again, in the course of my job I have met more than a couple hams who sincerly thought their signal was 'clean' only to find out it wasn't.

There are indeed more and more RFI complaints than there were 10, 20, or even 30 years ago during the CB craze. This is not a matter of the quality of the devices people have in their homes, but the sheer number of them that are available these days compared to years ago. There was a time when a color television was a luxury, yet nowdays people have TV's in almost every room. Cordless phones were almost non-existent in the 70's, yet they are almost standard issue in todays appliance market. But interference still occured to these devices in the past just it does today. They are no more suseptible to RFI than they were 30 years ago -- on the contrary, since the frequencies used are much higher, cable TV is much more popular, signal processing is more advanced and the bandwidth response of tuners is better than ever, these devices actually receive -less- interference than ever before. But they are -not- immune to harmonics that land on their operating frequencies, which, in my experience, is the cause of almost all of the interference that is caused by intentional radio transmissions.

(I should point out that -most- radio and TV interference is not caused by radio stations of any sort, but by light-dimmers, motor speed controls, computer power supplies, wall-warts, coffee-makers, and a myriad of other switching devices that connect directly to the power lines. But of the cases where the source was clearly a radio station, the cause was almost always harmonics.)

I can argue that a person has the right to peaceful use and enjoyment of their property and premises. And I'm not saying that all, or even most, hams run a dirty station. In fact I believe quite the opposite. It's just a few hams that are either too lazy to check their signal or too ignorant to realize the possibility of harmonics.

If the ham has done everything reasonably possible on his end, it's very likely the problem will be no more. But if it -still- exists then the neighbor must decide whether he is willing to sacrifice his everyday appliances so the ham can play with his radio. Federal law says the neighbor is screwed. Many local and state laws state that the neighbor does not have to put up with such intrusions.

This is a conflict that must eventually be solved in the courts.

I agree with you 100%, and one of those "special interest" groups is the ARRL. They have done more to defend those that cause interference than they have to help resolve the problem to the satisfaction of both the hams -and- the general public.

>The problem is with the cheap Chinese produced electronic devices.

Honestly, I don't believe that at all. I have yet to find one of these devices that are ultra-suseptible to fundamentals on HF. If someone has an example, please post it so I can get one and test it for myself.

I think it's the other way around -- it is the illegal CBers that started the "I don't care" attitude towards interference, and that attitude is being adopted by some in the ham community. And yes, I believe the illegal CB problem far outweighs the problems caused by a few asshole hams that learn their operating practices from the keyclowns. But when good hams start defending the bad hams by wielding the sword of preemption, you can bet that the keyclowns will do the same and the problem in both arenas will just get worse.

It means that if the neighbors are being bothered by interference from a dirty ham (or even an illegal operator), and the FCC chooses to ignore the complaints as they do most of the time, federal law says the neighbors are screwed.

In WA you can sue in Small Claims court on the grounds of causing, maintaining, or failing to abate a public or private nuisance, provided the requested damages do not exceed the limits of the court. That's where the case I quoted was tried.

Try it the other way around -- suppose a community prosecutes a ham for causing a nuisance, but the case is dismissed on the grounds of federal preemption. The case doesn't need to stop there, as the preemption law can be challenged by the community. If they have a good case, the FCC may not take the chance of losing and will most likely drop the case or settle out-of-court. That's their MO, and that's why you have rarely seen any case challenging the constitutionality of their laws get anywhere near the US Supreme Court.

Assuming the attorney knows anything about FCC regs. Regardless, the judge can that judgement holds up on appeal is another ball of twine.

  That's fine, only it's your reference that didn't exist until this post, and it's not pertinent. I can understand your hesitance at coming forward when I used the term "man". Duly noted Shark was first and foremost in your mind when such a term was mentioned.
Something troubling is responsible for your inablity to follow a coherent sentence regarding the topic and claim you brought forth.

That you would somehow reference shark when it was clear as a bell to all except yourself the exchange was speaking only of you and I, illustrates several troubling crosses you are made,,no,,forced to carry,,,first and foremost is your communication deficit that has you not capable of concentrating on a single thought.

His "victim" saved everything, copies of internet threats, tape recordings, copies of posts, and kept impeccable records of the harassments and numerous threats over the last several years. Great thing about usenet,,you can't take it back.

What a joke. Hammie radio existed long before cb. That you "think" the birth of cb was the beginning of poor operator practice is testament to your knowledge concerning the history of radio. It is readily apparent to ALL old timers that were in radio prior to cb,,you haven't the first clue that of which you speak.

> And yes, I believe the illegal CB problem far

That communication deficit pains the hell out of you. I never saw a grown adult invent words that he uses on a regular basis. This is done by small toddlers that have not learned how to effectively communicate and convey what they wish to say.
The illegal cb problem pales in comparison to the hammies. The rain report effectively proves your "belief" incorrect. It's not a "few" hammies breaking the law,,it's hundreds and hundreds per year. If the cb problem was worse, the FCC would prioritize. They may be underfunded, but they are not neglectful in enforcing the most serious of problems. First and foremost is safety issues, You, as a self-professed commercial radio station engineer should know such. The complaints concerning hammie radio and related hammie radio items (such as interference, other hammie complaints) far outnumber the complaints concerning cbers from a handful of angry hammies who feel they are the policemen of the airwaves.

>But when good hams start defending the bad

Fortunately, "good" or "bad" hammies is not addressed by the FCC in the manner in which you clamor. It's based on violation of rules (thank God), not, as you have alluded several times in the past, on judging a hammie as "bad" simply because he or she answers a question concerning the freeband or an amplifier, or a subject you feel constitutes a "bad" hammie by his mere engagement of a given subject.

The likelihood of one individual being correct increases in a direct proportion to the intensity with which others try to prove him wrong

"Codified" laws usually include both civil AND criminal remedies? Such as? The only civil "remedy" is the right to sue, and if one wins, a judgement,,which is not a guarantee you will ever collect dime one.

I run into the same issues. In fact, my house sits smack-dab center of an interference lobe from a two-tower Class A station, and I can even pick it up on my scope. But it doesn't cause any interference with anything else, not even any of the sensitive audio equipment I service from time to time. If an electrical connection is corroded, that may indeed cause interference from a local source via unintentional rectification, but I haven't found that to happen nearly as often as some people claim. This discrepancy may be due to the larger wavelength of the broadcasted signal from the station, but I haven't seen any evidence to support that conclusion, either.

>I have my own analyzer and my station IS clean. Now what?

Are your neighbors picking up your signal?

Finding the source of RFI is just like troubleshooting any other piece of electronic equipment. Take your spectrum analyzer to where the interference is occuring -- it doesn't do any good to measure signal strength where it doesn't matter. Also, what are the devices that are receiving the interference? If you bring those same devices into your home (assuming you don't have interference with your own stuff, as per Bill's example), does it still pick up RFI? If you add a device to filter the fundamental does it still receive interference? Is the interference entering the device from the antenna, the power line, or some other unknown route? Is there RF on your power feed? Does either house have aluminum siding? If the RFI is coming through the TV, is it interfering with the audio or video, or both?

Some of these might sound like silly questions, but putting a bunch of silly answers together can draw a very different picture. And it's very possible that the device or devices in question simply need repair. But since I don't have the whole picture I can't say one way or the other.

>> And these are hams who swear >>up and down that their signal is clean and that the problem is with the

>It usually is, trust me.

You are right, it usually is. But a few aren't. Those are the one's I was talking about.

I thought I said this before, but I'll say it again: I don't think that all hams, or even most hams, run dirty stations. I believe most of them -do- run clean. The problem, as I stated before, is a few hams that don't have a clue and are going to ruin it for the good ones. But then again, I'm not a ham and I'm not about to defend any of them, good or bad. I see things from a bit different perspective because of my job, and until you have done the same job for a few years I don't expect you to see it the same way. But I -would- expect you to consider what I have to say because it is what I have seen first-hand. And what I have seen is that unintentional rectification is a far less common source of interference than poorly filtered transmitters. You may have seen different, and that's fine. Our tower cranks out several thousand watts 24/7, and one would think that with that kind of power unintentional rectification would be a major problem. It isn't, at least not here. Maybe it's a geographical thing....

The FCC 'investigators' rarely visit the scene to determine the cause of interference. If you read those cases in the FCC database they simply reflect what is claimed by one party or the other, but usually by the ham. Check the records for interference claims regarding commercial stations and you will see a very different picture.

Damn straight! It's good PR, great WOM advertising, and it's well within the station's rights to try to resolve any source of interference to its signal. Actually, the campaign started because of a couple broadcast pirates that were messing up the band. Go figure....

Unwilling. I haven't seen a case yet where a ham (or even a keyclown) wasn't able to keep his signal off the TV, radio or cordless phones if he made the effort. Mind you that there are still some old single-conversion radios that seemingly scan for the most obnoxious RFI on the band, and there is nothing you can do about that except replace them. Fortunately, they are usually old and cheap.

And the problem -is- your's to solve if you are the source. That's not law, it's just decent social behavior. If we choose to live communities, we should really learn how to respect the others in the community instead of shoving a federal regulation in their face and saying "tough titties" (that may not be the way it is intended, but that's the way it sounds to the other guy).

That depends. I've had cheap $5 phones which picked up radio stations faintly in the background, while in use. Switching to a more "bulletproof" phone eliminated the problem.

Interference from a TV station would be harder to ascertain. The greatest power output in on the video carrier, which, when received by a simple diode detection (As in RFI rectification), sound like a buzzing noise, not too much different than electrical interference.
Frequency modulated audio does not rectify well, in this scheme and will also not usually be discernable as intelligent audio broadcasts, unless it is especially strong, or there is some frequency determining component which promotes slope detection in the face of the FM modulation.

I don't know about the latest generation of 2.4 GHz digital cordless phones, but back a few years, I had a neighbor who was 5 doors down the street who claimed he could hear me on his 49 Mhz cordless phone. I was running a bone stock 4 watt CB, which was spectrally clean. You might be able to make a case that the near field was especially strong due to antenna design issues. But even so, it should not have brought that phone to its knees, if it was properly shielded.

I can run 100 watts and not interfere with neighbor "A", but I destroy neighbor "B"'s TV. Neighbor B has a Sony TV, which are notorious for RFI issues.

I don't doubt that. Not all hams are RF savvy, even though they should be.

They are both true. There are more devices AND they are made with less regard for RFI protection.

Case in point, I have a Fisher tube-type stereo receiver/amp, which was made in the late 60's. I could run all the power I ever wanted on any band, and there was nary a whisper out of that tube stereo. I recently replaced it for a "newfangled" JVC with a remote control, digital tuning, and all sorts of bells and whistles. My 4 watt CB destroys it. My 25 Watt 6 meter station blanks out the music (Fortunately it's FM so I don't get that awful feedback). Even my 2 meter SSB station gets into it. Fortunately I don't operate the stereo and the radios at the same time, or I'd have to think seriously about going back to my old stereo.

Some were more prone to RFI than others. Just changing brands could often cure an RFI problem.

Yes and no. By having a TV receive through a shielded cable rather than from an external TV antenna, reduces the potential for RF front end overload, it does little to prevent RFI which creeps in through the A.C. line cord. Not all RFI comes in through the tuner.

>But they are -not- immune to

You're right, you can't expect a TV to reject an on-channel harmonic.
But a properly operating radio should be operating with a -40 to -60 (depending on year of manufacture) dbc harmonic suppression. At 100 watts, a -50 dbc harmonic is 1 mW of radiated power. Not much in the grand scheme of things, and certainly no match for the grade A coverage footprint of a 50 KW TV station.

On that point, I also agree. I once ran across a poorly designed Radio Shack TV signal preamp which had a nasty tendency to self oscillate in the 220 Mhz region. Every now and then it would drift into the input of our 220 repeater. Talk about a bugger to pin down.

>But of the cases where the source was >clearly a radio station, the cause was almost always harmonics.)

Then I guess we have to agree to disagree, as I have had to mediate on several radio op's behalf to prove that their stations were not generating the interference (I was the only one with test equipment).
The FCC's website has documentation on RFI issues and what consumers should do to reduce near field rectification and front end overload.
In many cases, a high pass filter needed to be added to the TV to eliminate the problem. A.C. line interference was cured by wrapping a A.C. line cord around a toroidal ferrite core.

I had a neighbor who, back in 1983, complained to the FCC about my station. It seems that he was happy as a pig in mud, until one day his TV died and he bought a new one. All of a sudden he started hearing me loud and clear though the speaker in the TV. He swore that I was suddenly running "big power". He just didn't want to make the connection that the problem didn't start until he got a new TV. The FCC sent me a letter informing me that they had received a complaint.
I wisely sent them my ham call, even though I knew that it was the CB that my neighbor was hearing. The FCC, once they realized that I was a ham, literally let the matter drop. They referred me to a "TVI committee" (A group of hams who investigate RFI claims), but once we made initial contact, they dropped the ball, and I never heard another word.

And that is the crux of the matter. If a case can be made that the fault of the interference is caused by a dirty transmitter, then it becomes an easy case to mediate. If, on the other hand, the ham (or CBer) has done everything he can to make his station clean, but the neighbor is the victim of a poorly designed (Even if it's a $5000 HD TV) consumer product, then the only thing the ham can do, is not transmit. That may be an acceptable solution to the neighbor, but most hams love their radio as much as other people love TV, so it's back to who's rights carry more weight. That's not a case I'd want the courts to set precedent on, as they might just decide that mindless drivel such as "American Idol" or the umpteenth episode of "Friends" deserves more consideration than someone looking to further his electronics knowledge through the art of radio.

They defend hams against "witch hunts", where the radio operator is automatically painted as a "bad guy" simply because he enjoys a different venue for his pass time. You cannot expect the non-technical consumer to understand the nuances of RFI. All they know is that when the ham next door transmits, he kills their "XYZ device", therefore it must be his fault.

That has happened largely because most "normal" consumers don't know the difference between a ham and a CB'er. CB'ers have gotten a bad rap due to their blatant disregard of the rules and their penchant for operating high power and dirty amplifiers. In the consumer's mind Cb'er = Ham. I've had people tell me that I can't run 100 watts on the ham bands, and that they were going to call the FCC about it. Hams are starting to get tired of being lumped in with CB'ers, especially when there may be both an illegally running CB'er AND a ham in the same neighborhood. Guess which one is the likely cause of interference?

>And yes, I believe the illegal CB problem far

Because in all likelihood, they used to be keyclowns themselves.

> But when good hams start defending the bad hams by

PRB-1 does not apply to CB'ers, nor does many of the preemptions that were cited previously. CB'ers should be allowed the protection that their service by rule provides. But since the federal government does not grant CB licenses to specific individuals, local governments have seized upon this to justify legislation which restricts CB operation in many municipalities. IMHO, there should be no difference between a legally operating and clean ham station and an equivalently operating CB station WRT interference protection. But the local municipalities are much less likely to bring action against a federally licensed ham, than an unlicensed CBer. Many legal CB'ers may have to fold their operations rather than having to pay a large amount of money to defend against such a case.

1057. Possible Application for CB Radio?

Hello all. I have no experience with cb radio, but would like some input on whether or not I have a suitable application for it. We live in a rural area. My house is about 2500 feet from my shop/work area and has line of sight. My wife would like to be able to communicate with me. I think that cb radio might work for me, but how would I get it to page or ring me if I am not right next to the radio. Any thoughts on this? Any other possible solutions.

Thanks,

J

Jon,

For 2500 feet, you might find FRS a viable solution. The problem is to have it "ring". Hopefully some folks will know of some radios that will do this for you. One other possibility is one of those multiple telephones. I'm not sure what the maximum range is on those. I purchased one and it is great, but I haven't checked on its' maximum range. Seems it is 1/4 mile, which would be short.

Another possibility is MURS. You won't be dealing with skip and you can get a decent range (perhaps 12 miles or so between a base and a mobile). They are considerably more expensive than FRS (figure $100 or so per unit as opposed to $25.00 for two FRS units). You can go to the following:
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/MURS-OPEN/
They would be a good group to answer your questions. You will have to join as it is members only, but they do deal with questions such as you have posed here and can offer several alternatives.

Hello all, I have 4 amplifiers. Station 550, it does between 200 250 watts dead key and swings to 550. This amp takes 2 watts to do this. A ameritron ALS 500 moblie amp with the 10 meter mod. 25 watts swinging to 70 will give you 200 swing to 500 with 80 amps of draw on the battery. You can run this amp more effectivly by running two 2200 uf 16 volt electrolitic caps in parallel with that battery and the amp. I have a palamore three tube amp. 12BT6 driving two 6JS6Cs it needs tubes so I have no idea what it does. Then there is the VooDoo 300 B it is a base amp and puts out about 150 watts with 300 watts of swing. The power to drive this amp is 2 watts. The Station 550 and the voodoo 300 B are broad band amp so they will work anywhere between 80 and 10 meters. I have a Johnson Valaint II that needs a Low voltage transformer. Its for pick up only. To heavy to ship.
I have a Pro 2052 trunk tracking scanner as well as a 300 watt MFJ 949C antenna tunner and swr watt meter. Sycron 1000 watt meter as well as to rerceivers. I also Have a Pentium 233 complete dialup internet ready computer. Includes monitor keyboard video cammera vidio card and mouse.
I am looking for a good amp that I can drive with my RCI 2990. Some thing with 4 811s, or 2 or 4 CX 250s, or, 2 or 4 572bs, a single or pair of 3-500s all mounted vertcal of course

The Station 550 and the voodoo 300 B are broad band amp so they will work anywhere between 80 and 10 meters. I have a Johnson Valaint II that needs a Low voltage transformer. Its for pick up only. To heavy to ship.
I have a Pro 2052 trunk tracking scanner as well as a 300 watt MFJ 949C antenna tunner and swr watt meter. Sycron 1000 watt meter as well as to rerceivers. I also Have a Pentium 233 complete dialup internet ready computer. Includes monitor keyboard video cammera vidio card and mouse.
I am looking for a good amp that I can drive with my RCI 2990. Some thing with 4 811s, or 2 or 4 CX 250s, or, 2 or 4 572bs, a single or pair of 3-500s all mounted vertcal of course

It is not my intention to install 2 radios, only one to monitor as I drive. I am mostly interested in comments regarding the antenna (rf ground and electrical ground). Will this be a problem?

I'm thinking of mounting the antenna on the rear ladder rack and running an electrical ground to the frame. Will this work ok?

Of course it has. Not by judicial decision, but by the FCC's avoidance of the same. That's how and why HR2346 was drafted.

Shows you have very little experience unless maybe you are speaking of cb operation. In my experience of over 40 years of ham radio operation I have been involved in and had knowledge of many interference cases, and the inteference problem is almost always caused not by the ham station radiating excessive harmonic emission, poor filtering at the transmitter, but with the falult of the device being interfered with because of poor engineering, construction, and lack of shielding.

The trouble is, how do you convince an irate neighbor that their household electronics suck? They keep mass producing the same crap so it's not going to get any better in that respect.

I just bought a 52" tv for the family room, and it's a little bit sensitive to my shack, not real bad tho. I'm more concerned about messing up the screen.

My 27" or less tv's aren't really sensitive with my rf. (?)

If I had a neighbor tearing up my new 52" tv, he'd have a hard time convincing me that it was my fault. License or not.

Audio modulated FM doesn't rectify into audio at all unless there is an AM component. Broadcast-quality limiters are quite good at eliminating AM from an FM BC signal.

People are funny. When I was a kid I put up my first CB antenna on the roof. Like many people I spent the first few weeks just listening to the chatter. But not more than a week after the antenna went up I had a neighbor knock on the door whining about interference. A couple years ago I put up my first lowfer antenna. It is quite tall (60 ft.), and can be easily seen by the neighbors. But this antenna was used only for receiving, not transmitting. Well whaddya know, a couple weeks after the antenna went up another neighbor comes a'knockin' at my door whining about interference. Funny thing was that I hadn't even finished building the receiver!

>>Not

Sony sucks all around. I would rather not get started on -that- issue, but the chances are that the Sony is bad. They work fine when they are new. But one spike on the antenna or coax and they will pick up RFI from anything and everything. If your radio is coming through a Sony I'll bet that you are not the only source of interference. However, if they have cable, it's a good idea to check it -- you could be inadvertently coupling RF onto their line.

Well, learning is part of the hobby, right? What suprises me are the number of hams who think that they are running clean because they plugged in a LP filter, or because their radio was expensive. If it were only that simple.....

It's true that they don't build 'em like they used to. Sony is a perfect example of that. But even there, if the device is working properly there usually isn't a problem. The problems occur when the device is made faulty by some other cause, such as line surges or CATV bullets. Now -that's- where product cheapness really shows it's ugly head.

That's surpising because JVC (RCA of Japan) is usually pretty solid stuff. Email me the model number and I'll see if there's a fix.

That's because some were FM and some were AM. The AM phones will pick up harmonics just like a shortwave radio. The FM phones are mostly immune to RFI, even to harmonics that land on it's operating freqs. But even with FM, if the harmonic is strong enough it will dominate the discriminator.

No it doesn't. Modern TV's use switching supplies, a design which filters RF quite nicely. Older TV's used linear supplies where the transformer stopped RF dead in it's tracks. The way RF gets into a TV hooked to CATV (or a long run of coax to the antenna) is through an RF ground loop. You can eliminate the RFI either by ground-isolating the power lines and running a seperate ground wire adjacent to the coax (hard), or by powering the TV through an extention cord running adjacent to the coax for as long as possible (less hard).

The emission limitations for broadcast stations are not based on decibels below the fundamental, but on absolute limits that are very, very low. And if you check the current FCC regs you will see that similar (and also very low) limits have been imposed for any new manufactured ham transmitters and amps. This was done in response to the FCC recognizing that receivers are more sensitive than ever before, and even harmonics of very low power can cause interference to the intended function of these receivers.

Now this is what I'm talking about. It's like the FCC says RFI is a bad thing unless it comes from a ham, in which case the rest of the world must suffer.

There is a difference here. The ham is transmitting a signal into someone else's private space. The other person is doing nothing to interfere with the ham. It should be up to the ham to use his radio in a way that doesn't cause problems for anyone else. Point the antenna in a different direction. Use a different antenna. Make an agreement with the other person to only transmit at certain times (more commonly called 'sharing'). There is no reason a ham can't stop his interference, or at least limit it to an acceptable level.

From a different perspective, and assuming you can prove that your signal is clean, have you ever thought of suggesting to the person that they return the merchandise as defective?

Because it is. You are intruding into their homes. You take from them some of the comforts of everyday life that any reasonable person would expect to enjoy in the privacy of their own home. It's a nuisance like any other nuisance,

I have plenty of experience as an EE. My point was not that there are devices which are suseptible to RFI, but that the RFI can be eliminated by the ham if he really wants to do so. Most do, but some fall back on federal preemption as an excuse not to even try.

Well I was under the assumption with all of

It worked, George reported me from his AOL

So if my town passes some nutty no interference law and the locals then apply that law to a local ham and he then challenges the law because he says federal law pre-empts it, then the FCC automatically gets into the case? If you believe that, I have a bridge in Brooklyn

The authority hasn't diminished because of HR2346. All that did was extend ability to take action against illegal CB activity to local police (if and only if local jurisdictions empowered their police to do so).

No. If the town loses based on federal preemption, they may have standing to appeal on the grounds that the federal preemption law is unconstitutional (or on some other grounds), at which time the agency responsible for the law being challenged (the FCC) would be enjoined.

It seems to be the popular opinion of congress despite the fact that they initially held a different opinion. Didn't you listen to the to the last State-of-the-Union speech? And how can anyone with standing challenge the constitutionality of the Act when it is under those laws that anyone, even a natural-born US citizen, can be locked up for months or even years on only the -suspicion- of terrorism, without a trial, without being charged with a crime, without access to legal representation, without visitors, without due process of law..... without any of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution? That's what the Patriot Act allows the government to do. Do -you- think those laws are constitutional? If you do, then think about this: Under the Patriot Act, the same thing can happen to you. All that needs to happen is for someone to claim that you threatened someone with a weapon, and if the powers that be don't like your choice of breakfast cereal, you too can become a political prisoner in the great United States of America. That's all it takes under the Patriot Act. And if you didn't know that about the Patriot Act then you really need to spend a little more time catching up on current events.

Before HR2346 the FCC was either unwilling or unable to effectively enforce the Citizen's Band. Cause or effect, take your pick because in either case their authority suffered until they conceded a portion of their jurisdiction to local authority. Since nothing has improved at the FCC since that time, it's very likely that they will concede more of their jurisdiction in the future.

In case you missed it (or just ignoring it), I said that "this country is governed by the majority of the people, not a few holier-than-thou hams," which is true. But instead of addressing the issue you decided to whine about name calling. To wit: "Again, your derogatory name calling pretty much sums up who the real smart ass is." I have refrained from "name calling", yet you are still avoiding the issue that the majority rules under a democracy, and that hams are not the majority -- not even close. Do you have an opinion about that, or would you rather go back to whining about name calling?

WHO would enjoin the FCC. If the town loses, just who would then enjoin the FCC on appeal to. Typically, the town wins on the local level (i.e. the local court/magistrate or whatever. The appeal is then on a state appeals court basis by the defendent. IF, the state appeals court then reverses...or perhaps it even goes to the state supreme court where it is appealed, I still see no one directly engaging the FCC in the court process.

People threaten others all the time and no one is being locked up as you suggest. Now if someone threatens ala the terrorits in Spain, then I have no sympathy for them. For all the hew and cry of the liberals against the Patriot act they can't cite one example

Your opinion only. The HR2346, does not give cart blanche power to local government to simply shut down legally operated CB stations. HR2346 allows local governments to empower their local police to enforce existing FCC rules and regs regarding CB. It does NOT allow local government to create more intrusive or more restrictive CB rules. For example, a town can not simply outlaw all CB activity, a town can not ban CB antennas, etc.

But in the area of law we are discussing, YET has still prevailed. The truth is, most local law enforcement don't care or want to be bothered with things like radio interference, etc. There's no glory in it and winning in court requires significant technological proof.

Actually, majority doesn't always rule. For example, a town can not outlaw antennas for CB, Ham, or anything else just because a majority of people might want that. A town can't impose a set of "approved" colors for which I would only be allowed to paint my house (small exception in that arena for special historic districks). A town can not prohibit me from parking my legally registered car/truck in my driveway.
A town can't outlaw operation of CB, Ham or any other federally permitted radio service.

How well I remember spring break in Fla. Well actually I don't, all I remember is alot of drinking, alot of hot looking babes.

One club right on the beach, I believe it was in the Ft. Meyers area, that to get in you of course had to be old enough to drink, but also wearing beach attire, and once you got past the age check point, you were walking around in beer foam up to your neck. What was cool about that was the girls once under the cover of the foam would remove thir bikini's, made for some fun dancing heheh.

One of the girls from the local Red Cross office just came back from Fla, she went down to visit her daughter and son-in-law who are both Sgt's in the Air Force. Of course she came back just in time for the cold and snow up here.

I told her, if she'd have brought me back a beach bunny like I asked, the weather would have been nice, but since all she brought me was a coffee cup, she came back to nasty weather hehehe.

Likely, if changing a beam heading helps, it's probably reducing the near field strength of the interfering signal, below the point of susceptibility. The same can hold true for any harmonic content as well.

I guess conditions vary. I've talked to people who have claimed that they could hear our nearby broadcast station through appliances that shouldn't be able to receive radio signals. Granted, this is only anecdotal evidence, as I didn't witness it personally. But I would wonder why these people would need to lie about something like that.

Now, no (at least I don't think so, as I don't have much time to "do radio" these days. However, back in my "radioactive" days in the old neighborhood, I heard many second and third party accounts of hearing my station through phones, cheap clock radios, and equally cheap stereos. TV's I didn't bother, as a rule, except for a few notable exceptions, where I didn't herringbone the picture (as the classic case of harmonic interference would manifest itself), but instead my audio would blast through the speaker (Which should never occur as the TV's audio receiver is FM, and I was using AM), which smacked of rectification in the audio stage of the TV.

Ah, but it does matter! I was verifying that the signal I was putting into the air with my equipment was clean, and I did that.

You touched on some interesting external causes of RFI. There have been cases where strong near field signals have been rectified by corroded connections (like metal gutters or siding), and the signal reradiated as a form of intermodulation, which can have the same effect as harmonic generation. In this case, the transmitter is clean, but the effects of the surrounding area can mimic a dirty transmitter.

I've even seen a case where a poor joint in a ham's antenna, caused a spur to be generated. This is especially troublesome in repeater operation, where these IMD products can desense the repeater's receiver.

But unless these culprits are on your own property, you have no control over them. If I find that "harmonics" were being generated as a result of rectification in my next door neighbor's siding (a different neighbor from the one complaining from RFI), what can I do? I'm not about to pay to re-side his house, and he's under no obligation to do it himself.

Those are all intelligent questions to ask, when trying to get to the bottom of the issue. The problem is that in many cases, you won't have access to the problem devices, as the neighbor may not be receptive to "that radio asshole" tampering with his stuff. Also, I am not comfortable with adding any devices to people's equipment, as in their eyes, any future problems that they may have with their equipment, will automatically be the fault of the work that you did. It doesn't matter that you and I know that this is a ridiculous conclusion. But remember, we're dealing with non-technical people here, and that is the least of the wild theories that they come up with. I had a radio associate about 20 years ago, who had a neighbor who bought a new TV (it was a Sony), who then started getting TVI. Then this neighbor also started having reception problems, and blamed it on the radio op's large beam antenna (even when the radio op was not transmitting). Never mind the fact that this neighbor's other TVs worked alright. But the neighbor insisted that beam antenna was blocking signals only to his new Sony TV. It didn't help that a local TV repairman could not find anything obviously wrong, and concurred that it was "likely" that the radio op had something to do with the problem. We joked about it, and nicknamed the radio op's beam the "Sony Signal Sucker" (Or S.O.S. for short). But this situation illustrates the lunacy of dealing with the non-technical mind.

>Some of these might sound like silly questions, but putting a bunch of silly

Those are hardly silly questions! They get right to the core of the issue. But sometimes solving them is the real challenge.

>And it's very possible that

If would call the installation of devices to limit exposure to near field RF, a "repair". One that should 've been made at the factory.
But those $.50 worth of parts add up when factored against millions of consumer devices, and has an impact on profit. Considering that RFI situation are not likely for most consumers, the manufacturers took the risk of cutting corners in the name of increased profit.

There are a few bad apples in every bunch. That's why we have so many That's true in many facets of life. That's why I am attempting to throw some cold water on the assumption that the problem is bigger than it really is, and that the fault lies with the radio op in the majority of the cases.

I can't explain it either. But I've been a party either directly or as a "consultant" to other people, who have had RFI issues. From proximity lights, to burglar alarms, to smoke detectors, computer speakers, and all sorts of other electronic devices, many of which do not contain a receiver in them at all. How can a device with no receiver, discriminate between a dirty transmitter and a clean one? Is it more likely that a device like an amplified computer speaker, is responding to a -20dbc (I would consider that "dirty") harmonic, or the full strength fundamental?

The FCC had investigated a number of cases. They also rely on competent independent engineers to do so as well. It didn't take them long to realize that the majority of cases were the fault of inadequately shielded C.E. devices. They also have a fact sheet which addresses what to do if you receive interference on a telephone, since a telephone has no receiver, and therefore has no reason to have any RF on it. Other devices fall under the same parameters.

Some may try to make the case that the FCC dropped the ball, and should have done a more thorough job. But my own experiences back up what the FCC has concluded.

> Check the >records for interference claims regarding commercial stations and you will see a >very different picture.

I would offer that commercial stations have a financial and public relations agenda, which would be more than sufficient motive for limiting their exposure as an RF "bad guy". If they can "explain" away RFI problems as IMD products from another transmitter (A "sloppy" ham for instance), they can deflect their responsibility in the matter.

I have an Icom 706 HF transceiver. I can hear a strong local AM broadcast station on its fundamental frequency, the second harmonic, and the third harmonic, which falls right below the 80 meter band. If I turn off the radio's preamp, the harmonic goes away. I also have a Yaesu FT-757, on which I do not hear the same interference. Now, based on my own investigation, I would conclude that the Icom's receiver preamp is being overloaded by the fundamental signal from the radio station, and is creating IMD products or some other spurs. Is this the fault of the radio station? What makes my situation any different from a consumer device problem other than I am technically able to diagnose the real problem on my own? Should I have complained to the radio station? Would you not agree that my "interference" was the fault of my own equipment?

Even if it means deflecting their part of it onto a nearby ham by suggesting that his transmitter is "dirty"?

>Actually, the campaign started because of a couple broadcast pirates that were >messing up the band. Go figure....

I love radio pirates. Not because they defy the law. But I enjoy the raw, un packaged productions. Nowadays most commercial stations are clones of hundreds of others. They've taken the creativity and local personality out of individual markets in the name of a "proven" corporate strategy. The result is a network of bland cookie cutter programming, which lacks the style and depth that I remember from the 60's and the early 70's.

I have. Other than offering to buy the neighbor a new TV or other "device" that's more RF immune, once you're within your technical spec's, there's often not much else you can do other than reducing your power, or reducing the amount of time to spend "talking".

> Mind you that there are still some old single-conversion radios that >seemingly scan for the most obnoxious RFI on the band, and there is nothing you

No they're not, that's my point. There are still MANY of these "signal seeking" widgets on the market. My JVC stereo, amplified computer speakers, Sony TV's, the list goes on. I have ham friends who, either for themselves or as a "favor" (to themselves actually) to their friends and neighbors, will take their 2 meter HT with them when they go to a place like Best Buy to look at new TV's. Waving the HT in close proximity to each TV while it is on will reveal which ones are somewhat immune to RFI and which ones are problems in the making.
Lines in a picture or buzzing sounds out of the speaker, are signs that this is not the TV for you.

I agree with this 100%. The problem is that many neighbors wait until they've had it "up to here" with the problem before calling your attention to it. By then they've become somewhat belligerent, and not too receptive to you tampering with their stuff (not that I'd want to for the earlier reasons). They will also insist that YOU, the ham, pay for it all because, after all, the ham is "causing" the problem, even if the symptoms are the fault of the poor C.E. device. I had another ham friend who hung a tray full of high pass filters on his front door with a note that basically said, "For TV interference, take one filter and call me in the morning".

I use an antron all the time when camping. I use bungee cords, usually in a tall tree.
I've also used it only a few feet above the camper, tying it off to the entrance rail next to the door. A 20 or 30 foot pushup pole should work very well. Using the 20 foot pole, one only needs to attach guide wire to one section if you sink the bottom section in the earth and affix the "top" bottom section to near the roof.

It is not my intention to install 2 radios, only one to monitor as I drive. I am mostly interested in comments regarding the antenna (rf ground and electrical ground). Will this be a problem?
I'm thinking of mounting the antenna on the rear ladder rack and running an electrical ground to the frame. Will this work ok?

Save yourself the hassle,,,,if you're looking only to monitor, buy a fiberglass "no ground" marine mount and put it wherever you like..even inside the motorhome..

you need thousands of watts on channel 6 NO MATTER where you are if you actually want to be consistently talking and taking out mud ducks. sure anybody can sit out there on the water or anywhere else and yell there handle between keys all day and get heard every once in a while and if your lucky enough somebody on the other end of dx land may even confuse you for the real deal but to be the real deal sheer rf power is needed. you sir are not the only one living by water.....

You should be. Everyone should be worried, because if they can pass laws like basic civil rights that affect you directly.

Some people are indeed being locked up. But what I am suggesting is that this law is wide open for abuse by the government, and there is little chance for any victims to challenge it because those same victims are locked up tight and stripped of their right to mount any sort of legal defense.

Local LE's do indeed have a stake in the elimination of RFI at the local level because the FCC doesn't do the job at the federal level. If you do a thorough search on google you will find dozens upon dozens of local ordinances that outlaw RFI despite federal preemption. Many of them exclude hams, many don't. And local LEA's are especially concerned when the FCC interferes with the prosecution of anyone that causes RFI which disrupts their local emergency and vital services (Helm v. Louisville Two-Way Radio Corp.,(Ky. 1984); Southwestern Bell Wireless, Inc. v. Johnson County Board of Commissioners,(10th Cir. 1999)). The desire was there, and so was the proof. The deciding issue was federal preemption. But hey, nothing lasts forever.

Have you ever heard of a 'planned community'? I think they have a new phrase to describe them these days, but the concept is the same: If you buy property in a neighborhood, as part of the sale you must agree to follow the bylaws of the neighborhood. I don't know if it's legal, but it's done.

>A town can't outlaw operation of CB, Ham or any other

Who said they can? More word-twisting? I just said "majority rules in a democracy", and it does. If the majority is fed up with FCC's lack of action regarding RFI complaints, you can bet that eventually the majority will speak and be heard at the federal level. That's the way this country works (most of the time, at least).

You rallied against it suggesting methods that were no more legal than the Act itself. I have always agreed that the Patriot Act was bad law, but an American needs to have to have faith in the people and in the system of government we have. You have neither. It's a good system, Twist, and it works. Sometimes it works slow, but it does work. And when it works in the way it should, you can be that much more proud to be an American. But your ideas of fighting bad laws in the wrong way does nothing but make it more difficult to do it the right way; i.e, -using- the system instead of fighting it. And it helps if you aren't paranoid.

I guess it depends on what you're hearing it through. The 15.734 Khz horizontal sweep rate is more like a whine. The 60 Hz vertical sweep component is more like a buzz.

Exactly! So any intelligible sound that passes through a TV's audio section is being rectified in a place that it has no business being, usually well past the limiter stages. This phenomenon is reflective of poor design. In many of these cases, the RFI entered through the A.C. line cord and got coupled into the audio amp stages.

Oh boy! have you hit the nail on the head there. People have other interference problems (squirrels chewing their antenna lead), but if they see an antenna, they conclude that their problems are the fault of a "transmitter".

I find that a number of cable installation are not grounded properly at the entry point to the home. That's supposed to be code, but some of the contractors who do the majority of cable installs around here are only interested in getting the most money they can in one day.

It's never THAT simple. But it's a start. Good (and properly grounded) low pass filters will further reduce any harmonics that weren't properly filtered in the radio.

I love JVC products as well. I have another JVC system downstairs (Different model) and it's fine. If I remember tonight, I'll look at the receiver for the model number. I assume that the problem is either A.C. line or speaker cable related. I just haven't had the motivation to apply all of my known remedies yet.

Then there were the "transformerless" linear supply designs. THEY were, by far, the worst for AC line RFI ingress. There was nothing to stop the RF from riding along the supply rails and into an audio stage.

At 50 KW or more, you would need tighter specs. -50dbc down from 50 KW is still .5 watts, which could be significant, and outside Part 15 specs.

Unless they very recently changed the rules, -60dbc is the current harmonic spec for most transmitters used in the amateur and land mobile services.

It's just a case of experience. Hams are noted for being more technically aware of their stations operation. That may not be as true today as it once was, but it's still a valid observation when compared to other services which are designed to be used by non-technical people (Like CB).

Hams also have volunteer groups within their own ranks to take care of these things. I just got lucky that the matter dropped. Had my neighbor made a bigger fuss, they may have pushed the issue. I figure that my neighbor (Who himself used to be a CBer) turned me into the FCC just to "scare" me.

Last time I looked RF doesn't observe borders either real or imagined.
It is impossible to prevent (Unless you want to enclose your house in a faraday cage) RF from "polluting" your airwaves.

In other words stop transmitting. Hardly fair. Especially when the consumer devices.

What's considered "acceptable" is subjective. And that difference in perception is the source of most of the contention. Most people work during the day time, and enjoy their "entertainment" at night. That leaves a fairly small window for compromise where either party isn't giving up something that is important to them.

Some people are happy if you stay quiet during certain sporting events. Other people will settle for nothing short of the total elimination of any and all interference. I've had to deal with some people so paranoid that they feel that the ham might give them cancer as a result of the RF exposure. How do you fight that level of paranoia?

>From a different perspective, and assuming you can prove that your signal is >clean, have you ever thought of suggesting to the person that they return the Human nature is such that people become very defensive at the mere suggestion that their equipment is to blame. And since this is normally a design issue, any replacement that they get of the same model will likely be just as bad. Suggesting a different brand/model now begins to infringe on that person's right of individual choice.

It's never a pretty sight.

Ok, look at it this way, would you blame the weather for making your house cold, if your front door was wide open? Maybe we should just stop all cold weather? Afterall, that cold weather is "intruding" into someone's home. Why should a homeowner take steps to block these intrusions? They should be eliminated at the source.

That's basically the position you are taking.

>It's a nuisance like any other nuisance,

Being told to give up an important hobby and passtime, is a "nuisance"
as well. It all depends on your perspective.

I believe that all radio operators should be responsible for making sure that thei stations are all in compliance with FCC rules and are built and operated within the guidance of good engineering practice.
Once this criteria is met, then any further RFI becomes the problem of the recipient, since it can be demonstrated easily that poorly designed consumer devices are responsible for the inability of the device to reject interference. You wouldn't live in a house without walls, so why should you settle for devices which lack proper shielding?

Exactly! Sympathetic vibrations. It's like your signal is tapping someone else's

No, but what you -can- do is isolate the 'tuning fork' and dampen it so it doesn't oscillate. The culprits are usually resonant lengths of audio and video cables.

That's not such a looney concept. Every antenna has a capture radius. Maybe that one had an exceptionally large "suck zone". Also, have you ever checked out Bill Beaty's site? http://www.amasci.com/

I probably mistated myself in all this quagmire: The dirty hams are few, and are only a small contribution to the problem as a whole. A larger part comes from keyclowns, who I believe will be responsible once again for tighter restrictions on ham radio. But if there's one thing I don't like it's a cocky amateur trying to educate me, a professional, about radio and electronics. They are different fields to be sure, but many aspects are the same. It's the basic amplifier circuit. Any amplifier will oscillate if given enough feedback in appropriate phase. An RF signal can be enough to cause a high-gain amplifier to oscillate. It might oscillate on the frequency of the stimulating signal, or it might just sit there and 'ping' on it's own resonant freq. But one thing is common to most of these devices, and that is they are most suseptible to frequencies in the high-HF and VHF portions of the spectrum. I don't know exactly why that is, but I suspect two possibilities: the physical size of the circuit and it's wires have lengths that make efficient secondary couplings to stray RF. The other idea is that while some equipment is intentionally protected from strong AM broadcast signals, the efficiency of the filter drops off with increasing frequency. Of course those ideas are nothing more than speculation, but they are things I intend to pay attention to in the future.

I don't know when these investigations occured, but I know that sometimes they will refer a ham to an "RFI committee" which is comprised of more hams. Either way, the state of electronics is changing so fast that it's hard even for a professional to keep up with the latest advances. That may be why I like vintage

On the contrary, most stations are perfectly willing to admit any case when their emissions exceed specs. In fact, such instances are required to be logged in the station's records. What broadcast stations -don't- like is being blamed for interference that is caused by other sources, such as keyclowns and a few dirty hams. I'm sure that good hams can appreciate this point of view since they are always getting a bad rep because of the keyclowns.

The difference is that a person can walk into any house in the US and expect to see a TV, a radio, CD player, computer, and wouldn't be at all suprised to see a cordless phone, garage door opener, etc, etc. They -don't- expect to see an ultra-sensitive ham radio. Your equipment is exceptional -- an 'exception' from the norm. Another difference is that as a ham you -expect- and -accept- such issues as receiver overload and RFI. Most people don't.

That's way off base, Dave. We don't deflect anything. If a listener calls us and tells us that something or someone is interfering with their reception of our transmissions we will check it out. Like I said before, most of the time it's a power line problem. If it's a radio problem we can easily pin down the source and address the issue with the ham (or keyclown, as the case may be). We help resolve the problem on both sides of the fence. In fact, that's how we found two of our best employees (long story).

I'm with you 110% there. The station I work for is one of the few remaining independant stations in the area, and every month I wonder how long it will be until we get swallowed up. If you think about it, radio is just going through a transition into networking, something that television did decades ago. But you still won't catch me working for Pinnacle or Clear Channel.

If that's what it takes. I found that most neighbors are more than willing to give a little if the ham is willing to do the same. That's how we all get along in a society -- compromise. If they are not willing to compromise, perhaps a third party can mediate an agreement.

Anything will overload if you feed it enough RF. But like I said before, unless I can see it for myself I really can't say one way or another. And I still think there might be a fault with your JVC because that's not very characteristic of their quality. I have a lot of JVC gear and none of it has ever caused me a problem with RFI even in a noisy environment.

complicate the > issue?

Not confused at all. Let's try it agin slowly:

1. Local gov't charges me with some infraction which I claim they have no right to because of federal pre-emption. (Here's a good example:
a local law that prohibits the public from having a radio in a vehicle that can receive police broadcasts.) I have a ham transceiver which, like most such rigs, has a very extended receive range that can also pick up local police channels.

2. Several years ago, the FCC issued a blanket pre-emption against such local laws IF the violation is because the ham has a commercial ham tranceiver that happens to also cover local police channel(s).

3. In court (local court) I raise the federal preemption as my defense. The local court sides with the town and doesn't accept my defense.
I lose at the local level. (If, on the other hand,
I win, then end of case.)

4. I appeal the case to the next level, again asserting feeral preemption as over riding and that the lower court was in error in not accepting the defense argument.
The town files its own counter argument. At this point, the FCC is STILL NOT involved...nor would I expect it to be. The arguing of the federal pre-emption is all under my legal position.

5. Do you expect the court to "enjoin" the FCC directly at that point? If so, by who? If not at the appeal level, then why or how would the state supreme court level be any different?

They'd have to do so by changing the Bill of Rights first.

Good, then we agree that if a neighbor complains about another neighbor's CB operation, and upon investigation it turns out the CBer is operating in full compliance with FCC rules, then no further action can be taken under local law.

The point is still one of enforcement...and even you

Many of those types of RFI laws are not for incidental RFI, but rather they were created to take action against anyone deliberately interfering with police transmissions...usually using an acctual radio setup to transmit on the police frequency.

Yes, but, the bylaws of such a planned community are not laws at all, but rather they are contract clauses.

Yes it is legal...but it isn't done under local township ordinance.
The "planned community" is done by contract law. As a buyer, you agree to the terms of the community's bylaws when you purchase the property.

If you violate the bylaws, the community or homeowners association takes a civil action against you under contract law...it does not involve the township at all other than the case probably being handled in the local court system.

What happened to "the majority rules" on the local level? You placed no criteria as to federal vs local in your original expression.

Thank the advent of DNA testing....more prisoners have been freed from death row in the past 5 years than than have been sent there. The current judicial system does not "work". For an alleged "enightened" western society, we have jail terms for victimless crimes, jail sentences extremely disproportionate to the crime, and as you eloquently pointed out, more and more poor laws being constructed and passed and rammed down our throats that take away any fundamental liberties (as you also illustrated)

I was thinking more along the lines of weak limiters/poor AM rejection, but poor supply regulation could just as easily be responsible for what you describe. In that case a power line filter won't do the job -- you would need either an isolation transformer, or run the power cord with the coax (if there is coax).

No kidding! And remember those plug-in doo-hickeys that allegedly used the power lines for a TV antenna? They did nothing but establish a power/antenna loop that turned the TV into a very good white noise generator.

So the interfering ham should just brush off the neighbor and transmit anytime

I dunno. Ask Twisty. But looking at it from the other person's point of view helps a lot. For example, people have a reasonable expectation that things they own and use should work they way they were intended. Manufacturers can't make things bullet-proof, and there will always be some vulnerabilities. So they have to limit those vulnerabilities to what can be expected in normal, everyday use by the vast majority of people. Close exposure to ham radio transmitters, I don't think, could be classified as normal, everyday use by the vast majority of people.

You have to draw some lines somewhere. There are what.... about 100,000 hams in the US? Out of more than 300,000,000 people? So is it unreasonable for people to expect that their modern appliances don't talk to them in the voice of the ham next door? Sure it is. Whose responsibility is it to make sure that doesn't happen? The manufacturers? No, because they make these products for the millions of people who pay for them, not the thousands of hams who interfere with them.
It's up to the ham to make sure he doesn't piss off his neighbors. That's the bottom line.

Well, human nature is such that hams become very definsive at the mere suggestion that the manufacturer of that equipment isn't the person transmitting RF into your neighbor's home. And that person's right of individual choice was limited by the actions of the ham and nobody else.

Cold weather is a normal fact of life that everyone expects to happen and therefore prepares for. Home intrusions by weather or anything else has a high probablity of occuring if there is no door. OTOH, most people will live their entire lives without ever witnessing a case of RFI. So why should everyone have to "buy a door"? It is just plain unreasonable to expect 300 million people to spend their time and money to protect themselves from the occasional ham radio operator.

The world does not revolve around ham radio.

How about the FCC telling people that they must either give up the use of their TV, cordless phone, and whatever electronic gadgets they use, or pay gobs of money to get the house under an RF condom, just because some ham moved in next door and wants to play with his radio? That's not a nuisance?

Is there something I'm missing here? Are hams some sort of superior race that the rest of the world must crawl in their presence? What right do hams think they have to take away the rights of others for the sake of a hobby? Am I the only person that can see the arrogance of that kind of attitude? Or is that what the human race is evolving into and I just got left behind? If that's the case then stop this thread because I want to get off!

What's the matter, Twist? Not getting enough attention from the doctors today that you have to seek it from me? Or is it just that time of the month? Take your Midol, take a nap, and maybe when you wake up you won't be so obsessed with my existence.

Ahhhh...this I grant you,,,,,your use of the term "consistently" is what constitutes the difference.
I get on the bowl once per week......I do NOT use thousands of watts from the water and I damn sure don't need thousands, even hundreds of watts to make a contact,,,,sure,,,there have been times when I couldn't get through,,,,,but keep repeating the same number or handle (those are the rules, I didn't make them) enough, and if you're being heard, someone is going to let you know it, even if it's only to get you to shut the hell up,,,no doubt about it, I have been victim to this,,I can't ghetto talk and I don't try to talk any other way than what the good Lord give me, and lemme tell ya'...when some of them boys hear a white boy in their receive, and that's all they hear,,,,(thanks to mama nature FIRST, output and antenna second) they will reply. In fact, every time I have been on for the past month or so, it's been heavy Texas. In fact, Texas has been the norm everytime I go out in the morning,,why the hell you think "GW" is bleeding from the gums so frequently? Shux..,this past week I was sitting on the RAMP talking to WitchDoctor in Beaumont (sp)and he said I was raping his receive.,,then there was 187, Mr Audio, Smooth Operator, Mr. Bodine,,,,,,,can't remember right off the bat who else,

I didn't design the rules,,,,just play by them. I'm not into long

Nah. So far, I'm the only "Twisted", unless of course, my fan club takes to the air like they do in here with my choice of identity. Emulating a thing of beauty, and all that jazz. Although I have, for some reason, confused some and been called "Mister Twisted" a few times. I changed my mic battery and it hasn't happened since.

>but to be the real deal >sheer rf power is needed. you sir are not the >only one living by water.....

Nope,,but I'm in a very small contingency of those who are out ON the water talking DX on the bowl,,,,,,and letmetellyouthis,,,,,,,I don;t know what you run, and I ain't gonna ask...but, hypothetically, if you are blowing 1000 watts on land,,and take that 1000 watts out to sea,,,,,,,,,,,,,you know what? Big difference. Major difference. HUGE diffference. MEGA difference. You know who the military radio communications officer in this group is,,,,email him and ask him if what I am saying is not the absolute gospel concerning AM voice transmission from the water. I've even talked barefoot on 6,,at 4 AM EST from the shelf that leads into the middle grounds (sometimes called "The Shallows") between us. C'mon down. Bring your rig. Sometimes believing is in the eye of the beholder. This is exactly how I was turned on to the south St. Pete crew...the big man just had to see it for himself. Now, not only did I add another name to my very short list of kick ass radio techs,,but am meeting plenty of good folk that I NEVER would have met if not for channel 6. I had no idea there were so many bad asses in the bay area. I know about the Orlando Crew, Daytona Crew, and Miami Crew (RIP), but I had no clue what was going on in my back yard. I do now. Nope,,I sure as hell ain't no real deal when it comes to the big boys,,,,I'm just fortunate enough to have found mother nature's sweet spot,,,and it's soaking wet.

i have two questions regarding cb antennas:

1) for mobile operation, given two cb antennas, to what extent does size matter. for example, i've seen many that are ~3ft, but are the long whips better for reception/transmission?
2) for HT operation, are longer telescopics better than, say, 28" 'flex' jobs, or is any difference negligable?

i'd appreciate any light that anyone can shed. thanks much,

thor

The name 'George' is merely a euphamism for comcast usnet poster (68.45.67.196) . Whether your name really is George (or not) is pretty much a moot point, more or less.

twist i'll give you the gold star for trying and even actually talking on the bowl every now and then with little to nothing and trust me i mean this in the most respectfull way but your way of talking on the bowl is the mud duck way. when you can key down and as i said "consistantly" take out ducks and get your named called then your doing something. and yes trust me i know all about talking on the water, its for this reason alone my little 1200 watt dead key and 4 kw pep on AM is known for taking out the entire houston area from the shores of sandy galveston island. theres guys in the dome dunning 3cx5000 tubes and even barnaby jones with a 4cx10,000 tube and i do my McNasty with just four 3-500z's. if i was side by side with them boys or even a mile or two inland off the water i wouldnt have a chance. i've worked dx from shrimp boats in the gulf running 2 pills and even bigger at times and i know for sure that what you say about talking on 6 from the middle of the water is bullshit. being in the middle of the water doesnt always make for a bigger signal escpecially when you trying to talkthru land locked guys running beams and thousands of watts. the bowl isnt about mother nature. its about competing against other stations, anybody can yell and scream long enough to prove a point but to actually be a super star it takes power.

Or rectification in an audio stage. For a simple AM detector, you only need a half wave rectifier. Practically any semiconductor device has this capability. When the volume control has no effect on the intensity of the RFI, it's a sure bet that the interference is being coupled into a stage downstream from the volume control.

That's one way to look at it. But be that as it may, finding the causes is only half of the trouble. Trying to convince unrelated third parties to participate in your crusade, can be even tougher, especially when there is nothing in it for them.

People tend to look at any "tampering" with their property as a potential for future problems. You then unwillingly assume the liability for any problems (related or not) that my occur for many years afterward.

Some people are unwilling to accept that the source of the problem is in their equipment, and expect that the radio op "fix" the problem on his end. Since this may not be possible, you can quickly reach an impasse.

That sheds some light on your position. Someone who has spent considerable time learning a trade, tends to get defensive and contradictory when an "amateur" tries to tell them what to do. But the truth is that sometimes professionals become too "scripted", or set in their ways, and may refuse to consider other options, especially when they come from people who they consider to be their technical subordinates.

It's even simpler than that, any amplifier which contains bypassed properly.

Some line filters, which are designed to block 60 Hz components may also work fairly well at 500 Khz, but are totally ineffective at 28 Mhz.

In that case, I'd agree. But you and I are talking about 2 different things. On the one hand you have the case of a "dirty" ham or CB'er blocking the reception of a legitimate broadcast station. On the other hand, there are RFI complaints leveled at a broadcast station for interference to nearby consumer devices, in the same vein as that which is leveled against hams and CB'ers.

Why? That's the FCC's job, not the radio station's. The radio station is only responsible for making sure that their transmitter is not "dirty", or trying to provide solutions to reduce interference from THEIR transmitter. It has no place intervening in a situation which involves a third party transmitter.

Since your time is money, the only reason I can see where the management of a radio station would condone this sort of "charity" work, would be for P.R. reasons. Who else but the mass media could be responsible for spinning issues into larger monsters than they are, in order to advance an agenda. No one need look any farther than the democratic party and the propaganda that it spreads through the liberally slanted media to see that.

When I get some time (I know I sound like a broken record), I'll look into it a bit more. I suspect that it's either speaker wires or the AC line cord that is the ingress point. I'll eliminate all connected accessories (Which were also on my old Fisher stereo, lest you want to say "Ah-HA, it's the accessories that's causing the problem), down to the basics and go from there.

I'm sorry, but I'm not paying to replace a $5000 HD component TV system. I'll spring for a high pass filter or a toroid AC line filter. But I'm not going to enhance his viewing experience on my nickel. I don't even own that type of equipment myself (maybe that's why I am immune to my own RF). A simple TV, with a VCR and a DVD player attached.

A few of the filters had been taken. He moved out to a better house a few years later, so I don't know if his solution was totally effective and to what degree. I imagine that it must have helped since he was only affecting the neighbors who were not on cable. Those who still had outdoor antennas, would 've benefitted by the reduction of his signals by the high pass filter.

  This was on the rain report not too long ago. I'll see if I can't get you a url and more information citing the particulars...it's crazy down here,,,Spring Break officially began last week and I can't keep up this year...think I just may take a looong summer vacation road trip this year.

Wow,,can't believe you said that,,,,I HAVE taken a Bluefish charter out of Sheepshead Bay years ago,,great fun and big toothy fish,,,great fighters. Special places on my list of things to do in your area: Visit a good college bud in Plainview who has been after me for years to come visit,,,,Lindys, the best cheesecake in the land, Rockaway (old memories of Rockaway and Coney Island) and I can't forget the Village,,,,,if I can recover from the check I just mailed to Unca Sam by summer,,,,NY may definitely be on the itinerary...wife wants to go to Maine and I was thinking about even going a bit further. We have a standing invite from a longtime DX club member who I have talked to for many, many years on Cape Breton Island,,"Canso" to be exact. Been to Canada, but never up in the extreme northeast corner. If NY is on the itinerary, I'll be sure to let you know...it's been awhile since I've been to the big city,,,,with the exception of Miami and Atlanta.

No doubt, my man, I'm most certainly a duck on the bowl..I'm not interested in taking anyone out, but I do understand you MUST do that to be heard there. Check it out,,,,after all these years of channel 6 being the channel to avoid, or tune, or set your swrs, etc,,,suddenly, I was made aware of a way in which to be heard on the bowl. Now,,I have also been privy to a certain man's technological savy that he is in the process of applying to the water....this man now wants his own boat after seeing for himself what I was running (practically nothing) and I am shuddering at what he will accomplish,,EVENTUALLY. This man is interested in taking his landlubber amp to the water and he is hellbent on making it work. I can't take what he usually uses for an amp on the boat,,..I'm not (and couldn't do it anyway) going to place that kind of strain on my electrical system and I damn sure ain't modifying anything to accomodate that kind of power. But one can blow a few hundred legal watts on 10 meter if one is licensed and that few hundred watts suddenly is reflected in power "power" (IE: 100 watts to the third, fifth, twentieth, fiftieth power, (whatever) etc, etc,.)
Now,,,imagine what wouild happen if one devised a manner in which to smoke multi-thousands of watts from their boat.
A visiting "vacationer" dropped anchor in Tampa Bay back in 1999 or 2000 for about a week. He had twin diesels and some kind of watts transmitting big power. Everyone in the bay who was on the air back then remembers this fella,,,,,when he keyed, he rendered the entire HF spectrum useless for those of us on the peninsula. Dirty, dirty, dirty,,,,,he left after about 4 days and things returnde to normal (whatever that is).

>the water, its for this reason alone my little

See,,,and if you think back,,,you and I haven't made a contact since that SSB thing a few years ago when the hurricane was in the Gulf directly between us,..and if you remember,,we had zero conditions, not much of signal on each other, but was able to hear each other's audio. The band was quiet except for us...what I'm getting at,,,,is I don't think the Gulf Coast of Fla and the Gulf coast of Texas really needs "conditions" to make the contacts. Sheer power across unobstructed water is damn near magical.

>theres guys in the dome dunning 3cx5000

Exactly. That's exactly what I have been doing,,,getting up and over some of these heavy hitters with water and not a lot (by comparison) of power. I can even talk from the dock at times,,,,pull 50 yards or so on to the pavement and nothing,,,zip,,nada, as far as transmit goes.

>i've worked dx from shrimp boats in the gulf >running 2 pills and even bigger at times and i >know for sure that what you say about talking

I'm not going to try and change your mind. You have an open invite at any time. It's not bullshit,,why else you think "gw" is all over me all of a sudden? "Cause I'm in his receive and he cant stand it.

>being in the middle of the water doesnt always >make for a bigger signal

Oh, yes it does. Given the parameters I cited, the water always will increase your signal.

>escpecially when you trying to talkthru land >locked guys running beams and thousands of >watts.

Tim,,,,as you said,,,if you are on the coast of Texas on the beach, or parked with your wheels in the saltwater, I dont give a damn what poor ass CF is running, he ain't getting in between me and you from Houston when we are both on the water with nothing between us,,,,,assuming, of course, we are both running SOME power.

>the bowl isnt about mother nature.

Agreed, as I can get your coast any day of the week, practically. But it sure plays a large part.

>its about competing against other stations, >anybody can yell and scream long enough to >prove a point but to actually be a super star it >takes power.

No doubt. I'm no superstar and I didn't ask for this worldwide status. KC8LDO Lelnad insisted he try his hand at Kingmaker and for some reason, he chose me. Tim, next time I get on, I'm gonna email you,,,let your ears be the judge, or you can always look at CF and the manner in which he cries about my newfound joy.

Frank;

Suck Zone? I looked at the link, didn't see what part of it you were referring too. Do you think there is a "zone" outside the physical demensions of the antenna that "sucks " the RF toward it?
